91st YEAR, No. 78 ★★ VICTORIA, B.C., WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 11, 1974 15 CENTS DAILY, 20 CENTS SATURDAY

ST. JOHN'S Nfld. (CP) — Joseph R. Smallwood, the man who led Newfoundland into Confederation, said today he wants to become premier again.

Smallwood, 73, who retired from politics in 1972 after his first election defeat in 22 years as premier, announced he would seek the leadership of the Liberal party at a convention here Oct. 25-26.

"I am convinced that if the Liberal convention in October truly reflects the feeling of the Newfoundland people, then I will be chosen to lead the campaign against the present government in the next general election," Smallwood told a news conference.

The only other declared candidate for the leadership is Ed Roberts, chosen party chief following Smallwood's retirement from politics in February, 1972.

Smallwood resigned his Liberal government in January, 1972, after a series of recounts and court hearings showed the Progressive Conservatives were the victors in an October, 1971 election.

Premier Moores' party defeated the Liberals in a subsequent election in March, 1972. Standing in the 42-seat house now is Conservative 32, Liberal eight, New Labrador Party one and vacant one.

Food Price Index Up 14.3% in Year

Times News Services

OTTAWA — Food prices in August were 14.3 per cent higher than a year ago, Statistics Canada reported today in the latest consumer price index.

The index was 10.8 per cent higher than in August, 1967, and one per cent higher than July, with housing prices coming a close second to food in boosting the index.

House prices, coupled with record mortgage levels and increased repair costs pushed the housing index up 9.4 per cent above last August.

Rents contributed a relatively small amount to the August rise, up only three-tenths of one per cent in the month.

A nine-tenths of one per cent average increase in new car prices accounted for most of the rise in the transportation index, up six-tenths of one per cent in August and 10.5 per cent in the 12-month period.

The all-items index for August was at 169.6. Stated another way the mix of consumer items which could be bought for $100 in 1961 cost $169.90 in August, $168.00 in July and $153.00 in August, 1973.

The consumer price index is based on a 1967 survey of family spending patterns and weights of major component indexes are: Food, 25 per cent; housing, 31 per cent; clothing, 11 per cent; transportation, 15 per cent; and other items 18 per cent.

Most food items for home consumption increased in price in August. An exception was fresh vegetables which normally drop in price in late summer but this year's decline of 18.4 per cent between July and August was more than normal. Hamburger also declined in price for the sixth consecutive month despite increases in cost of other types of beef.

Pork prices rose 8.8 per cent in August, beef prices 4.2 per cent and fresh fruit 3.5 per cent. Sugar prices were up 12.6 per cent to a level 160 per cent above that of a year earlier.

During the year the index for restaurant meals went up by 20.2 per cent and for food eaten at home 13.2 per cent.

The clothing index rose by five-tenths of one per cent to a level 10.8 per cent above last August. There was a general advance in clothing prices last month.

Index Ups Pensions

OTTAWA (CP) — Basic old age pensions will increase to $117.02 a month in October, Welfare Minister Marc Lalonde announced Tuesday.

The increase, the fourth quarterly escalation for pensions and income supplements this year, is designed to help keep pension payments in line with the rising cost of living.

Under an indexing formula, the basic pension will rise to $117.02 from $112.95. The maximum guaranteed income supplement for a single person or married person whose spouse is not a pensioner will rise to $82.08 from $79.23. Together with the basic pension this will mean a maximum monthly total of $199.10.

The maximum supplement for a married couple if both are pensioners will increase to $72.89 each from $70.36.

Family allowances will also increase by $1.76 on the basic $20. This is a preliminary figure and because the adjustment is made on an annual basis the indicated increase accounts only for price index increases during a nine-month period ended in July.

MURDER SKETCHES PREPARED

Artist's drawings of two possible witnesses to the double murder in Esquimalt will be circulated throughout the province today.

Esquimalt Police Chief Art Burton said police were successful in locating two informants today and based on their information a police artist is drawing portraits which will be circulated on reward posters and to police departments throughout B.C.

He said the two people wanted for questioning by police were reported to have been in the vicinity of Ray's Food Market, 1325 Esquimalt, around the time of the murders.

The chief also said "general public response has been good" as far as leads are concerned, particularly since a reward of $5,000 has been offered for information leading to the conviction of Esquimalt's double murderer.

Mass Pardon Out —Ford

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Ford said today he will review individual requests for clemency from Watergate defendants, but is not considering the possibility of blanket pardon which his aides announced just 24 hours earlier.

Ford's statement was read to reporters by Senate Republican leader Hugh Scott following a one-hour, 45-minute meeting between the president and congressional leaders.

It directly contradicted a highly controversial announcement by deputy press secretary Jack W. Hushen Tuesday that Ford had the idea of a mass pardon "under study."

There is "no study going on," Scott said, apparently paraphrasing the president's own words.

Ford's brief statement said Hushen's announcement was prompted by questions about a plea for clemency from the wife of John W. Dean III, the former White House counsel who was jailed last week for his part in the Watergate cover-up.

The president did not dispute Hushen's claim that he had been authorized to announce the possibility of a blanket pardon. But the statement said that any study of clemency will be made only on individual requests from Watergate defendants.

The issue of pardons for Watergate has sent more waves of criticism crashing over the White House Tuesday.

Senator Sam Ervin (Dem. N.C.) chairman of the Senate Watergate committee, said: "I can't imagine that he (Ford) could possibly make such a mockery of the principle of equal justice under law by pardoning these men who undertook to steal from the American people their right to a free election and to undermine the process by which presidents are chosen."

Congressional reaction included these comments:

"My definition of equal justice is not restricted to those involved in Watergate and Vietnam draft dodgers," Sen. Lowell P. Weicker, R-Conn. "There's no end."

Sen. Daniel K. Inouye, D-Hawaii, asked: "Are they

Massive Raids Break Pep-Pill Smugglers

WASHINGTON (UPI) — United States and Mexican police today arrested more than 120 suspects, including several "drug millionaires," in a series of raids that one official said broke the back of illegal pep pill trafficking in the U.S.

RCMP in Vancouver also helped in the investigation.

The arrests followed an eight-month investigation in the three countries and Europe into the smuggling of more than three billion "mini-bennies" — small benzedrine tablets — worth about $1.6 billion into the United States annually from Mexico.

"There is no question about it. We have broken the back of the illegal amphetamine operation in this country," said Doug Chandler of the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration.

"We got a couple of people in Mexico who are described as drug millionaires — they are drug rich," said Chandler. "They have also got rich from traffic in other drugs."

Most of the 124 persons in custody at mid-morning were in the United States. In Mexico, 26 were arrested, including one Mexican national.

The DEA spokesman said he expected the arrests would total about 140.

"The operation has gone smoothly and there have been no injuries reported so far in the arrests," said Chandler, who co-ordinated the raids.

Stuart Stromfield of the DEA said raiding parties were armed with sealed indictments, opened just before they struck.

"The raw materials used to manufacture these pills are being imported illegally from Europe," from some of the "biggest chemical companies," according to Stromfeld. He declined to name the countries or the firms.

FEIFFER IN TIMES

Satire and black humor are the trademarks of famed cartoonist Jules Feiffer, whose distinctive drawings begin in the Times today on page five, where they will become a regular feature.

Feiffer's syndicated cartoons now appear in newspapers all around the globe and have made him a hero of the egghead and the secret dissenter.

He has also written plays which have been produced on Broadway and wrote the screenplay for the film Carnal Knowledge. The relationship between men and women is one of his favorite themes, as well as politics and social mores.

NEWS BRIEFS

Canadian's Death Sparks UN Protest

NICOSIA (UPI) — The United Nations peacekeeping force in Cyprus today lodged a protest with the government here over the killing of a Canadian soldier.

Pvt. Joseph Jean Claude Berger, 21, of Rimouski, Que., was killed by a shot in the back of the head Tuesday night while riding in a UN vehicle in the outskirts of Nicosia.

Guns Found in Cells

MONTREAL (CP) — Quebec Provincial Police said Tuesday a weekend search at Archambault Institution, in nearby Ste. Anne des Plaines, uncovered a large amount of weapons and money in prisoners' cells.

The QPP is questioning several prisoners in an effort to learn how revolvers, dynamite, gunpowder, bullets, an electric motor, an electric saw, an electric drill, money, and drugs got into the cells.

Frost Cuts Wheat

LONDON (AFP) — The world wheat harvest for 1974-75 now is expected to be less than first estimated because of frost damage in some important producing areas, the International Wheat Council says.

Oilmen Released

ADDIS ABABA (UPI) — Ethiopian guerrillas have freed three American oil company executives and a United Nations official they kidnapped six months ago and led on forced marches through rocky desert land to evade pursuers.

Ill Prisoners Freed

NICOSIA (AP) — Greek and Turkish-Cypriot leaders agreed today to free sick and wounded war prisoners as a prelude to a general release of all captives in Cyprus crisis, the United Nations said.

Greek-Cypriot President Glafkos Clerides and Turkish-Cypriot Vice-President Raouf Denktash also agreed to free all prisoners under 18 years of age and teachers and university students, says a communique from the UN peace force.

Fired O'Grady Suing ICBC

Secretary and general counsel for the Insurance Corporation of B.C. Terry O'Grady, has been fired from his post and has launched a suit against the crown corporation for wrongful dismissal and breach of contract.

O'Grady, a former Victoria city solicitor, has been considered second in authority since he joined the corporation July 21, 1973.

His duties have been assumed by corporation general manager Norman Bortnick who declined to give any reason for O'Grady's dismissal.

O'Grady and his lawyer, George Murray filed the writ against ICBC Tuesday and claimed unspecified damages on the two counts.

O'Grady's ICBC salary was never disclosed but indications are he moved to Vancouver for a substantial pay increase.

His contract with Victoria was in the neighborhood of $48,000 a year.

He was 23 years in city service, being the city solicitor for the last 17 years.

O'Grady says he will not be returning to Victoria but will probably go into general practice in the Vancouver area.

When he took the ICBC appointment, O'Grady said it would give him an opportunity to help build "one of Canada's great ventures from the ground up."

$18M Loss for ICBC?

A 10 per cent loss of $18.5 million could be shown this year by Autoplan, Premier Barrett said Tuesday.

The statement made during a phone-in radio program refutes an earlier report alleged to be taken from a secret brief indicating a first-year loss of $100 million or more for the government-operated car insurance plan.

Barrett said Autoplan revenue is expected to be $185 million and he said the operating loss could amount to 10 per cent, about equal to the rate of inflation.

The premier's admission also contradicts a statement by Transport Minister Robert Strachan, who is responsible for Autoplan, in which he said the system would break even or suffer marginal loss in its first year.

Barrett said he has a statement giving figures for the first six months of operations of the Insurance Corp. of B.C. But there will be no public report until the end of the first 12 months.

100 Die in Race Violence As White Rebels Collapse

Times News Services

LISBON — More than 100 persons have been killed in street battles in the last 24 hours in Lourenco Marques following the collapse of a white settlers' rebellion, the official radio station in the Portuguese territory reported today.

The Star newspaper in Johannesburg, South Africa, quoted a senior Portuguese official as saying at least 200 persons had been killed or wounded in the widespread racial violence.

South African radio quoted refugees as saying the colony was near anarchy. A Lisbon government communique said troops were having difficulty in stopping spreading violence.

Witnesses at the South African-Mozambique border said many of the hundreds of Portuguese settlers who crossed the frontier abandoned their cars and walked to escape from roaming black gangs and roadblocks.

Just before most communications to Lourenco Marques were cut Tuesday night, a police officer told newsmen the riots in the black shantytowns were roaring out of control.

"This is another Vietnam," he said. "We don't know how to stop them."

A wealthy Italian farmer, Nick Benini, contacted Johannesburg by phone for a few minutes and said many people living outside Lourenco Marques had abandoned their homes.

In the city, he said, whites barricaded their homes. Food was running short because shops were closed and trucks with supplies were not arriving from the countryside.

A Portuguese government communique issued in Lisbon reported "racial violence" and said the army is flying reinforcements to the capital from northern Mozabique.

Blacks rampaged through sections of the city looting and burning shops, stoning cars and fighting gun battles with whites.

Beira, Mozambique's second-largest city and chief port, was reported quiet after two days of noisy demonstrations.

The Lisbon newspaper O Seculo reported that the leaders of the three-day revolt have also fled to neighboring South Africa or Rhodesia.

Army detachments were posted at key points throughout Lourenco Marques and were patrolling the black shantytowns on three sides of the city amid "intense agitation," Lisbon officials said.

Reporters said whites could travel in some sections only by armed convoy. Black smoke hung over some areas, and most businesses were closed.

Two Crashes Kill 3 Bikers

Three young motorcyclists died in two accidents Tuesday, one in Colwood, the other in Saanich.

James Edward Sigurdson, 21, of 1514 Brooke, and his brother, William Carl, 19, of the same address, died when the motorcycle they were riding on the Pat Bay highway went over an embankment in the Royal Oak area.

Saanich police said the brothers were killed instantly.

AIR CRASH KILLS 69

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (UPI) — An Eastern Air Lines DC-9 jet skimming through fog patches and heading for a landing at Charlotte's Douglas municipal airport crashed and burned today, killing 69 of the 82 persons aboard. (See picture on Page 3.)

Most of the 13 survivors were burned.

The crash occurred at 7:33 a.m. in an open field 2½ miles south of the airport.

A Federal Aviation Administration spokesman, Jack Barker, said that moments before the crash the flight had just been "handed off," or turned over to the local tower controller by radar control.

"Nothing in any conversations with the local controller or the radar controller indicated any trouble," Barker said.

Witnesses said most of those who survived were thrown free from the plane into a clump of trees.

The plane cut a 200-yard-wide swath as it came down, exploding in flames and sending debris and bodies flying in all directions.

Calvin Kenley, 20, who lives just 600 yards from the crash site, said he saw one of the survivors "just walking around in the field in a daze. He looked like he had run through a fire. Skin was just hanging all over him. It made me sick."

Nixon Pardon 'Admits Guilt'

WASHINGTON (WP) — President Ford granted Richard M. Nixon a full pardon even though he was informed that the former president would never enter a guilty plea or acknowledge criminal conduct in the Watergate case, White House counsel Philip W. Buchen said Tuesday.

At a White House briefing that left many questions unanswered, Buchen said Nixon's acceptance of the pardon was tantamount to an acknowledgement of guilt.

"The fact that someone accepts a pardon . . . means that it was necessary for him to have the pardon . . . ," Buchen said.

Asked whether Nixon's acceptance of a pardon implied an admission of guilt, Buchen replied:

"You can so read it."

Buchen also released a memo of the Watergate special prosecution force that listed 10 areas that could personally involve Nixon in potential prosecution. This was in addition to Nixon's involvement in the Watergate cover-up, which was the subject of a separate memo not released by the White House.

"None of these matters at the moment rises to the level of our ability to prove even a probable criminal violation by Nixon, but I thought you ought to know which of the pending investigations were even remotely connected to Nixon," the memo said.

The 10 matters under investigation listed in the memo:

—Tax deductions relating to the gift of pre-presidential papers.

—The Charles Colson obstruction-of-justice plea in the Daniel Ellsberg case.

—Transfer of national security wiretap records from the FBI to the White House.

—The wiretapping of John Sears, a former National Security Council aide.

—Misuse of Internal Revenue Service information.

—Misuse of the IRS through initiation of audits of Nixon administration "enemies."

The question of dairy industry campaign contributions.

—Filing of a challenge to the Washington Post Co's. ownership of two Florida television stations.

—White House participation in department of justice decisions concerning the International Telephone and Telegraph Corp.

—Campaign contributions made to C. G. (Bebe) Rebozo which allegedly personally benefited Nixon.

Buchen did not shed any light on two key questions arising in the pardon of Nixon. One is the question of whether President Ford had acted on the basis of reports of Nixon's deteriorating mental condition, of which Buchen said he had no knowledge.

Nor did Buchen explain, other than in reiterating Ford's determination to commit "an act of mercy," why the president directed him to prepare legal research on grounds for a pardon only two days after he told his first press conference that he would let the legal process run its course.

going to empty out the prisons now?"

"If it's a trial balloon, it's a bad one," said Sen. Robert Byrd, D—W. Va. "where do we stop . . . it merely compounds one mistake. It would complete the cover-up or cover-ups."

Sen. Jacob Javits, R—N.Y.: "I thought it was a mistake about the Nixon pardon and I feel similarly about the others."

House Speaker Carl Albert (Dem.—Okla.) said such a step would deepen the trouble created by the Nixon pardon in Ford's relations with Congress.

"Where would he stop?" Albert said. "Would it mean that all politicians in trouble would be pardoned?"

Two Watergate principals had differing reactions.

Convicted Watergate burglar Frank Stugis said: "I think it would be a wonderful thing. I don't feel like being a criminal all my life." Sturgis has served time for the burglary and now is free on appeal.

A more subdued response came from John Ehrlichman, Nixon's former domestic affairs aide and one of the cover-up defendants. He said that the problem with a pardon "is that when you know you're innocent, it precludes the possibility that your innocence will be established finally."

Stunned and a bit baffled by the earlier announcement that President Ford was considering pardons for all Watergate figures defence lawyers for the six men due to go on trial Sept. ~~30 for~~ the Watergate cover-up today cautiously awaited developments before taking further steps to try to clear their clients.

"You've just got to get up every morning and see if your shoes still fit," said one of the lawyers. "Take it one day at a time."

Students Vote To Run School

VANCOUVER (CP) — Students at the strike-bound Langara College were to begin taking over operation of the school today after the entire Vancouver community college system was shut down by picket lines Tuesday.

The students voted overwhelmingly at a meeting Tuesday afternoon to assume control of almost everything from cafeteria cleanup to the classroom. There about 12,000 students in the community college system with about half of those at the Langara centre. About 1,000 attended the meeting.

Vocational instructors' Association members, none of whom teach at Langara, set up picket lines Tuesday morning at Langara, the Vancouver Vocational Institute, the college's special programs division and in front of the Vancouver School Board offices.

The 280 VIA instructors have been without a contract since Jan. 1.

Meanwhile, the Kelowna School District became the eighth district in the Okanagan-Kootenays to close as a result of strikes by the non-teaching staff members of the Canadian Union of Public Employees.

The dispute affects nearly 45,000 elementary and secondary students. Other schools have closed in the Shuswap, Fernie, Windermere, Creston-Kaslo, Vernon, Castlegar and Trail districts. Five other school districts in the area operating with the help of supervisory personnel remain open.

Enrolment Off

EDMONTON (CP) — The number of students enrolled in the city's public school system has dropped 2.35 per cent since September, 1973, says a report presented to the public school board.

There were 69,170 students registered Sept. 6 compared with 70,833 on the same date last year.

Night Class Threat

Night school classes in Greater Victoria schools are being threatened by a dispute between the school board and its custodians.

The custodians, members of Canadian Union of Public Employees Local 382, say they will refuse to service or open the doors to night school classes as of Monday.

"We feel we've been subsidizing the school board for too long already," said Bob Cunningham, first vice-president of the local.

"We've been fighting this thing for 20 months."

CUPE claims its custodians aren't being adequately paid for all the work involved in opening the schools to the public in the evenings.

According to the union contract each school was supposed to be rated to determine how much custodial work was involved at each school. This would have taken into consideration the extra work at night, Cunningham said.

This rating has never been done, he said, so the extra work involved isn't being counted in the custodians' salaries.

As of Monday, said Cunningham, custodians will do their regular jobs cleaning the schools, and will lock school doors at the regular hour (between 4 and 6 p.m.). They won't open the doors after that, he said.

Dozens of Camosun College evening programs, due to start this month, could be affected by the dispute if it continues as most programs are held in schools.

The school board has called a meeting Thursday with the custodians to try to resolve the dispute, and said today it "takes the most serious view of the union's intent."

Local 382's last contract negotiations with the board ended in a strike.

Cunningham said that if the school board's attitude doesn't change, "They're going to come to another one."

The contract ends Dec. 31 of this year.

Empress Dispute Talks Thursday

Mediation talks in the Empress Hotel contract dispute will resume Thursday following an all-day meeting Tuesday.

Mediation officer Clark Gilmour has set aside Thursday, Friday and Saturday for meetings in an attempt to avert a strike by 497 employees.

He declined comment on Tuesday's talks, which saw representatives for both sides in separate rooms while he moved back and forth.

Seventy-two hours strike notice was served by CBRT Local 276 Tuesday morning. However, before a strike can begin after expiry of the notice, the union has to be advised by Labor Minsiter Bill King that Gilmour has submitted his report on the dispute.

Union members have voted 97 per cent in favor of strike action. They have been seeking a pay raise of $2 an hour in a two-year contract while the hotel has offered 60 cents an hour in a three-year contract. Base rate in the old contract was $2.50 an hour.

Finance Scrutiny: No Names to Board

Greater Victoria school board has no legal right to insist that people wanting to study trustees' financial statements give their name and address, trustees were told Tuesday night.

Trustee Lavinia Greenwood submitted to the board's legal committee a motion which would have the name and address recorded of anyone who asks to see a trustee's financial disclosure.

Then trustees should be informed of which people have looked at their statement, says her motion.

Under the Public Officials and Employees Disclosure Act, a statement of trustees' financial holdings must be filed at the school board office and be available to the public.

"I would have no authority to insist that (people state their names)" board secretary-treasurer Ernie Shaw told Greenwood. If people refused to give their names he would still have to provide the trustees' disclosures, he said.

Chile Releases Allende Backers

SANTIAGO (Reuter) — Chile's military rulers, marking their first year in power today with street demonstrations, have freed and exiled two top supporters of the late President Salvador Allende.

Exactly one year after their detention during the Sept. 11, 1973, coup, former defence minister Orlando Letelier and Oswaldo Puccio, President Allende's legal adviser, were freed Tuesday and flown out of the country under expulsion orders.

Informed sources said Letelier flew to the Venezuelan capital of Caracas while Puccio flew to Romania.

Sources said Gen. Augusto Pinochet, "supreme chief of the nation," will publicly announce the measure when he reports today in a televised speech on the military's first year of government. (See also page 36)

Informed sources said he will also announce the release of former foreign minister Clodomiro Almeyda, also in detention through the last year, and other sources say the government is studying the release of another 500 left-wing prisoners.

Letelier was seized at the defence ministry during the bloody coup whch overthrew Allende, while Puccio and Almeyda were detained at the Moneda presidential palace after it was attacked by fighter jets. The two were with Allende until shortly before he died.

Today, for the first time, the military rulers are relaxing their year-long ban on all political activities and permitting their supporters to take to the streets for demonstrations in Santiago and the 24 provincial capitals.

Estimates of the number of political prisoners in Chile range from the official figure of 2,200 to eight thousand reported by observers and people here involved in helping them.

the weather

A ridge of high pressure built over B.C. from the west yesterday and drove the wet weather out of the province. Thunderstorms occurred in the Kootenays Tuesday evening but rain finally ended there about midnight. On the other side of the Rockies Alberta was not so fortunate as strong gusty north winds swept rain and snow through much of that province overnight and temperatures lowered to near freezing.

The B.C. ridge is expected to hold its present position today and Thursday keeping skies mainly sunny. However there is a new Pacific disturbance heading toward the Queen Charlottes.

Temperatures will climb a little higher in the daytime to around 70. However, under clear skies overnight temperatures will probably drop to about 35 to 45 bringing a risk of frost to interior valleys.

Major Parole Change Sought

OTTAWA (CP) — A Senate committee calls for sweeping changes in Canada's correctional system and its method of granting paroles in a report prepared after two years of study.

The 139-page report, released today, calls for major changes in existing legislation to provide for a systematic parole-granting procedure understandable to all, including prisoners.

At the same time it calls for redefinition of the dangerous offender to make sure that this person, whether he be a rapist or a member of organized crime, does not get lost in society too soon.

It also calls for better supervision of those on parole through increased personnel and use of private agencies.

Some of the recommendations of the report:

—Sentences should be divided into three sections, much as they are now. The first one-third must be served in prison; "discretionary parole" could be granted in the second third and "minimum" parole—which a prisoner could refuse—in the final third.

—Prisoners would have a clear set of rules to follow to seek parole, would receive reasons for actions of the board — not now required and could appeal to a higher authority, but not the courts. They could be represented at hearings, but not by lawyers.

—A major overhaul of the system of sentencing, to make sentencing for the same crime more consistent and orderly and to provide a limit on the number of years that can be served through cumulative sentences.

Islanders Have Say, Trustees Promise

By LINDA HUGHES
Times Staff

The powerful new Islands Trust will give islanders "a lot more say and a lot more power" in determining their future, three government-appointed trustees, said today.

The trustees held their first press conference today, after a one-day planning session, and expressed obvious enthusiasm over their new role as protectors of the Georgia Strait islands.

They insist their much-maligned new trust is not simply another layer of bureaucracy designed to override regional authority and argue that the new body will co-ordinate the island's relationships with various government bodies and give islanders more say in future development.

They say they will meet with and listen to all island groups and give locally-elected trustees a great deal of weight in the trust's operation.

But while the trust will have control over all other planning and development on the islands from now on, the three trustees agreed they still have no authority over provincial government action on the islands.

Trustee Dave Brousson, former Liberal MLA for North Vancouver-Capilano, said the three trustees received a promise from Municipal Affairs Minister James Lorimer that they would receive full co-operation from all government departments.

This still means, admitted Brousson, that the government, its agencies and Crown corporations, are required only to "inform" the trust of their development plans on the islands.

But even that is an improvement, he said, since the government was not previously required to inform the regional districts.

Lorimer announced the appointments last week of Brousson, Hornby Island resident Hilary Brown, and Salt Spring Island resident and former regional director Marc Holmes.

At the same time he proclaimed most of the Islands Trust legislation which was passed at the spring session of the legislature and creates a new body with power of final decision over development on 13 designated islands and all other islands in Howe Sound and in the strait south of Hornby and Denman islands.

Two local trustees will be elected from each designated island on Nov. 16 to form five-member trusts over those islands.

Brown, who will serve as chairman of the trust, said most of its work will not begin until those local representatives are elected.

She said they plan to tour all the islands and to hold a meeting with members of the seven regional districts which have control over the islands. They will also meet with various government departments.

The trust will set up offices in Victoria, she said, and will begin hiring a manager and staff of three or four people.

ENROLMENT DROP PUZZLING

Enrolment is below expectations in all three school districts in the area, leaving school board officials puzzled.

Greater Victoria district, as of Tuesday, had a total enrolment of 29,273, down 700 from last year.

A drop of only 200 had been expected.

Sooke school district had an enrolment of 7,816 as of Tuesday, about 200 below expectations.

However, district officials expect another 100 high school students to enrol before the end of September.

Last year's enrolment, as of Sept. 30, was 7,704.

Saanich district, which had been predicting an increase of 700 or 800 students, has so far about 100 more than last year.

Enrolment as of last week was 6,074, compared with 5,967 a year ago. About 50 to 75 more high school students are expected to return during the month.

School board officials have no sure answers to explain the lower increase, but Saanich board chairman Rubymay Parrott said that tight mortgage money may have slowed growth on the Saanich Peninsula.

Kindergarten enrolment in Sooke district is up nearly 7 per cent over last year, but in Saanich district enrolment in Kindergarten and particularly Grade 1 is down.

In Greater Victoria, the population decline is most noticeable in older areas of the city, while in the Gordon Head area, elementary school enrolment has increased even beyond expectations.

A Workable Basis Is Needed

The one-week freeze on the B.C. Land Building, on the development site at Government and Broughton streets, has been lifted and demolition will proceed. That is fair enough. Few will object to the short delay — the whole project has been years in the making — to permit a last-minute examination of the premises to determine if they had sufficient historical and architectural value to demand perpetuation. While opinion may still differ on that point, there is at least some consensus regarding the worth of the property — and this is deemed local rather than provincial, hence not warranting conservation by the province.

Provincial Secretary Hall's action left much to be desired in its manner of implementation, since it demonstrated the same lack of co-ordination with the city that had marred the Reid property freeze. But the B.C. Land freeze was commendable in itself. What has emerged from the incident is the need for some co-operation — if not complete amalgamation of action — among the three provincial and civic entities concerned with preservation of historic buildings in this community.

There is little point in having them work in separate vacuums, as they appear to do now, still less at cross purposes. And certainly there is no point at all in leaving preservation processes till the eleventh hour when they would better have been initiated long before the demolition crews were at work.

Surely the authorities concerned can get together on this matter and co-ordinate their activities even if their jurisdictions are spelled out in different legislation. The city council could well offer some leadership in this matter, and so find at least one field in which co-operation with the provincial government can be achieved on an amicable continuing basis. What is everybody's business is nobody's business, and some of our local architectural treasures are under increased hazard by reason of this fact.

". . . and it's getting worse, doctor . . . yesterday I had an uncontrollable urge to pardon Al Capone, Jack the Ripper, Attila the Hun, the Boston Strangler . . . just to name a few . . ."

Time for New Bargaining Tools

Montreal's subway, which carries 500,000 people a day to their jobs, has been halted by a strike since Aug. 7. Rush-hour chaos descended on Toronto because of a three-week shutdown of its transit system.

A bill estimated at $20 million has been run up while more than a dozen freighters anchored outside Vancouver harbor wait out a dispute between the grain handlers' union and the wheat pools.

Vancouver negotiated a new contract with its police force earlier this year, narrowly preventing a strike by the men in blue. B.C. hospitals that sweated out a threatened nurses' strike in March now face a possible walkout by support staff — the employees who wash the floors, make patients' beds or prepare meals. Firemen in four Vancouver suburbs went on strike last month, and a special session of the Legislature had to be called to get them back to fighting fires.

The list of disputes in essential industries and services, ranging from merely annoying to life-endangering, is long. There is no need to mention the biennial shutdown of Her Majesty's mail, the five-day ferry workers' strike that stranded thousands last year on both sides of Georgia Strait, the deckhands' work stoppage that has halted shipping traffic on the Great Lakes, or the railway shutdown a year ago.

Bus drivers, hospital workers and firemen have seen the successes won by workers in other fields and followed suit. It's now routine in these days of double-digit inflation. Nobody wants to be left behind.

Compulsory arbitration is often mentioned as the cure-all. But Australia for years has had a complex system of labor courts and compulsory arbitration, all of which hasn't prevented illegal strikes. In fact, as federal Labor Minister John Munro pointed out, they often exceed the level of such work stoppages in Canada.

Recalling legislators to end a strike or lockout, as happened with the firemen and the Toronto transit dispute, and could occur in the grain tieup, is cumbersome and unwieldy. Its repeated use — and possible defiance — could bring laws into disrepute.

Mr. Munro proposes experiments with the whole range of collective bargaining tools. He suggested one himself, called all-or-nothing arbitration, or Russian roulette by its skeptics. An arbitrator in a dispute must choose either labor's or management's final negotiating position — the one he thinks closer to a fair settlement. The mechanism compels both sides to temper extreme proposals and reach an agreeable compromise.

It's one of the more unusual suggestions for industrial peace in essential industries, but the fact that the government is taking it seriously shows just how critical the problem is. We need to find a way to keep things moving while guaranteeing the freedom of collective bargaining—no easy task.

MAURICE WESTERN

When Ministers Reappear

OTTAWA — With the first session of the new Parliament rapidly approaching, the government is again becoming visible after its summer disappearance. Not all the credit for this belongs to Beryl Plumptre, despite her remarkable success in starting ministerial hares.

There is a good deal to be said for invisibility if it enables ministers to undertake serious planning without the normal distractions. The summer season is usually quiet and there is no reason to complain of that. But the circumstances this year are highly unusual and it seems to have occurred belatedly to the government that an appearance of inactivity is not very helpful at this time.

The latest comments of John Turner, although much less newsworthy than the duel between Messrs. Whelan and Ouellet, are far more significant than a debate about eggs or even about the wider theme of supply management in agriculture. For the minister of Finance has obviously sensed with concern the change in public mood which has occurred this summer and recognizes a need to counter it.

Recession Coming?

Increasingly, since election night ended the public debate over economic prospects, there has develped a sense that rising two-digit inflation cannot continue indefinitely and that it may lead to recession. Such sombre expectations are not attributable alone to national news; nor to economic forecasters. They may arise from business experiences of a character to arouse apprehension.

If, for example, shortages—now chronic—create uncertainty about deliveries, firms feel compelled defensively to enlarge inventories as and when opportunities present themselves. As these are currently being financed at extremely high rates, they are oppressed not only with higher costs but also with a sense of vulnerability.

It has always been considered a duty of government, and especially of the minister of finance, to try to sustain confidence in the business community. Mr. Turner seems to be approaching this in a number of ways. Essentially the message (of which more will presumably be heard in public speeches) is that the economy is moving not towards depression but towards a more sustainable rate of growth.

This, of itself, may not have very much impact. Government policy is directed to that praiseworthy end at any time. Unfortunately we have not escaped the bumps merely because the intentions at the ministry of finance were of the best. It is this, in part, that makes people apprehensive.

Flattening may be a more cheerful term than stagflation but a happy choice of words will not make much of a difference to those who are flattened.

Mr. Turner, accordingly, is seeking to strengthen business morale by other means. High government spending and borrowing are considered important factors in the inflationary situation. Election promises suggest even higher spending.

Borrowing, however, has become a very difficult problem because investors have been growing increasingly wary of Canada Savings bonds. The minister of finance is now seeking to reassure business by a new emphasis on financial restraint coupled with recognition that new programs will have to be "orchestrated"; meaning presumably that spending will be postponed until the era of economic flattening has been safely passed.

JOHN TURNER
. . . avoid over-kill

It can scarcely be said that earlier Liberal ventures in financial restraint were outstanding success stories; they all seem to have ended, unaccountably, with more people on the payroll and higher budgets. Mr. Turner does not promise anything "draconian" this time; on the contrary, he considers spending in an international context, warns that we are "all on a tightrope," and speaks of the danger of "overkill" tipping the world into a depression.

But this is one of the more agonizing aspects of the government's problem. For much of the anxiety about inflation's aftermath (or accompaniment) is attributable to developments outside our borders. This clearly is the case with the lumber industry which is now in difficulties — unappreciated as these may be by consumers who have yet to see any benefit in lower prices; doubtless because the dealers are saddled with inventories acquired in the months of shortages. Terms such as "over-kill" may not be the best sedatives for a troubled business community.

It is probably more reassuring that Mr. Turner is to visit Washington and then to meet with West European finance ministers. For the current uncertainty stems not only from the serious setbacks in other countries but from the apparent lack of concerted international action to sustain the world economy. There have, of course, been some meetings; even short term reliefs as in the case of West German assistance to Italy.

But in general international activity has been rather like summer government in Ottawa; invisible or unintelligible or both and not well calculated to have a salutary impact on world opinion.

Mr. Turner's concern is that the anti-inflationary efforts of Western countries should be co-ordinated to avoid the damage that might result from over-restrictive fiscal and monetary policies. He can probably assure foreign ministers that no grave danger in this respect is to be anticipated from the direction of Ottawa. How effective missionary work can be in other capitals is less certain; after all the choices for a near-bankrupt nation such as Italy may be much more restricted than they are in our own, happier case.

Hopeful Signs

But there are some more hopeful signs; including the report that finance ministers of West Europe, the United States and Japan have agreed in principle to co-ordinate anti-inflationary moves to spare world trade and employment. How wide this agreement can be, when the United States is still in search of a policy, is far from clear. At least, however, it is a good augury for Mr. Turner's foreign missions and perhaps he can lend some support to these efforts.

In any case apparent immobility, such as we have had this summer, may of itself make people more vulnerable to recessionary psychology. It is almost a first requirement in such times that a minister of finance should make himself visible and from what has been revealed of Mr. Turner's plans, this evidently is what he now proposes to do.

JAMES RESTON

Sombre Questions for Britain

LONDON — It seems an extreme and even silly question to be asked in Britain, of all places, but actually it is being asked and discussed here by serious men and women: Can democracy long survive the present rate of inflation?

The answer in many other countries is that it cannot, but the bet here is that in Britain it can and will. Nevertheless, the fact that this nation of amiable grumblers is even talking about the possibility of undemocratic means of controlling inflation, forming private vigilante armies to break strikes and keep essential services going, is, as the British say, a little odd.

The inflation rate in Britain is now about 20 per cent a year. Unemployment rose in July by 89,526, the largest monthly increase since 1948, and now stands at over 650,000. In the confusion of a jittery stock market, the prices of securities fell in August to the lowest point in 16 years, and more important back in the kitchen, people were running out of sugar for their tea.

Chasing Prices

Meanwhile, wages were chasing prices up the scale. Basic weekly wages rose at a record rate in July and were up over 18 per cent from a year ago, but consumer prices were up 20 per cent. Thus the ominous question: how long can this go on without crippling the economy, pricing British goods out of the world market, producing industrial strikes and class tension, and forcing government action to limit the traditional liberties of the British people?

The answer one gets from cabinet members now available in London is that the situation is serious but not all that critical. The Chancellor of the Exchequer, Denis Healey, speaks of bringing inflation down to about 12 per cent by the end of next year, but most other projections are more pessimistic. The London Business School's latest forecast, by James Ball and Terry Burns, is that, in the absence of some new and effective prices and wages policy, consumer prices will rise another 20 per cent in 1975 and unemployment will reach a million by the winter of 1975-76.

Anything close to another 20 per cent rise in prices and a million unemployed in the winter of 1975-76 would, officials here agree, create an acute crisis, and compel any government in power to introduce compulsory controls, which the unions unanimously oppose.

"We are like mountain climbers walking along a narrow ledge in a high wind," one cabinet member observed privately here the other day. "We may make it and we may not."

Bernard Levin, surveying in the Herald-Tribune what has happened in Britain over the last eight years, observes that what was unthinkable here eight years ago was now, not only a part of the thought, but of the daily life of the nation.

No government of whatever political complexion, he observed, certainly no democratic government, can now rule without the co-operation of the unions, nor pass legislation that can be carried out against the will of the unions.

Britain has now accepted this, as it accepts what is a civil war in Ulster, as a normal condition of life. "I suppose," Levin said, "that is, in essence, the fundamental change that has taken place in Britain." He defined the change as follows:

ROY MASON
. . . condemns vigilantes

"From our collapsing postal and telephone system to our ever-increasing inflation . . . from frequent traffic jams to permanent traffic jams, from political and industrial violence as an exceptional and newsworthy occurrence to the same things as a lurid and apparently permanent backdrop to our lives.

"From — this above all — absolute certainty that whatever else died or changed, our democratic institutions would remain basically the same whatever happened, to a state of affairs in which talk of dictatorships of the right or the left is the common parlance of the day. That is the kind of journey on which Britain has gone in the last eight years . . ."

This is more extreme than anything else this reporter has heard in Britain, but the mood is solemn, and the Chief Secretary to the Treasury, Joel Barnett, felt obliged to announce the other day that the greatest danger facing the country was panic. The economic situation, he said, is serious but not "catastrophic."

The government likewise has felt obliged to take note of two vigilante groups now organizing to deal with political and industrial chaos if it comes. Gen. Sir Walter Walker, former NATO commander in chief in Northern Europe, stated the objective of both organizations:

"We are not going to sit and watch these political bully boys, these trade union Communists and Fascists and those wretched young anarchists bring Britain to her knees," he told The Daily Telegraph. The politicians haven't got the fire in their bellies to tackle the problem. So it is up to us, the people of this land . . . to prepare for action ourselves."

Anti-democratic

The British Defence Minister, Roy Mason, described this as "blimpish bull" and condemned the vigilante organizations for "anti-democratic endeavors to exert their extreme views beyond and outside our recognized democratic and parliamentary procedures," and it is against all this extreme rhetoric and alarming economic arithmetic that the British will go to the polls in the second national election in seven months.

On the surface, the election question will be who can control the inflation, but under the surface, who can get co-operation of the unions to avoid industrial chaos. British democracy is probably not at stake in this conflict over how to control inflation, but for the moment nobody is quite sure, and that is something new in this troubled island.

In the end, the British people will decide, and for the moment they are a little like a family that has been off on a vacation they couldn't afford. They look and feel better, but the bills are beginning to come in, the house is in a bit of a mess, and the same old problems seem more ominous than before they went away.

That Noise

As a visitor from Ottawa I was shocked by the noise and dirt in Victoria. Would it not have been more sensible, especially for the sake of the many retired people, to turn this naturally beautiful place into a "human sanctuary." Instead, Victoria ranks amongst the noisiest cities in Canada. Why is there no law to force those inconsiderate youngsters to install mufflers on their leisure machines?

I readily grant that most immature minds need something to compensate for the big void of their mind and soul. This so-called sport does nothing for the benefit of the body.

In order for a child to develop normally, the parents have to show him or her the beautiful sounds and sights of nature. A child raised without close contact with nature will need artificial stimulants to cover its inadequacy.

Personally, I feel sorry for anybody who needs speed and noise to prop up his personality. — Wulfila Schuldes, Ottawa.

Transportation

This letter is one last attempt to inform Mr. Mollard and his colleagues of their misconceptions.

There are two ways to slow the increasing amount of fuel being used by travellers. One way is restricted travel. I don't believe this is a desirable or practical method.

The other way is to use more efficient transport means, such as aircraft instead of cars, such as huge aircraft instead of small ones.

The fact that aircraft in 1980 will use 50 to 90 times as much petroleum as in 1950 is meaningless. So what? They will probably use a million times what was burned by aircraft in 1915.

The only practical way to stop the usage of petroleum from escalating to dangerous levels is to develop and use more efficient transport methods. Trying to turn back the clock will never work. The C.A.S.E. would be better off spending its time promoting such proposals or electric cars rather than obstructing necessary proposals. — D. Truman, 2558 Bevan Ave., Sidney.

60 YEARS AGO

From The Times of September 11, 1914

Mrs. James Menzies, wife of the well-known Presbyterian missionary from Toronto, who gained considerable fame in the Boxer rebellion of 1900 in Peking, arrived in Victoria from the Orient by ship, en route east with her three daughters. In a brief interview, she said the work at the medical mission in Honan province which Rev. Menzies established was progressing satisfactorily. The same province suffered most from depredations by the warlord White Wolf, and although the mission had not suffered, many people in the district had been pillaged. Mrs. Menzies, who was in China during the rebellion which overthrew the Manchu emperor in 1911, said most Chinese seem satisfied with the republican form of government established afterward.

'Sold to American' In Ivy Halls Again

By JAMES EAYRS

Assistant-associate-full professor. PhD and preference given to candidates with Canadian research interests. Normal teaching load: 2½ courses. Apply to Professor I. M. Zeitlin, chairman, Department of Sociology, University of Toronto, 563 Spadina Avenue.

This advertisement appeared last February. Seven months later, the selection process has yielded its results. These leave everything to be desired.

Eight appointments were made. Not a single job went to any of the 30 to 40 Canadian applicants. All eight went to foreigners — seven to U.S. citizens.

Down the corridors of 563 Spadina Avenue echoes the chant of the Lucky Strike tobacco auctioneer: "Sold to American!"

Such an outcome might have passed muster 10 years ago, when Canadian sociologists were in short supply. Today, when they are desperate for jobs, it is a major scandal.

The official explanation from the U of T administration is that "all those that were hired had qualifications clearly superior to those of other applicants."

Colonizer in the field

That explanation requires for its acceptance what J. M. Barrie asked of audiences at Peter Pan — a willing suspension of disbelief.

I do not doubt that the successful eight passed with flying colors the test of "Canadian research interest." These are easily acquired. "Canada provides a convenient, safe and cheap place," one Canadian sociologist writes bitterly, "for the colonizer to do field work as a step on his way up an imperial career structure in American soliology."

How does it happen that some two score Canadians applying for jobs at the U of T sociology department this spring have had its doors slammed in their faces as surely as if its advertisement had specified beforehand that "No Canadians need apply?"

To understand the reason why, it is necessary to penetrate the arcane hiring practices of the North American multiversity.

On the buying side of the nexus of employment is the departmental search committee — to which inexperience and youth in the persons of junior faculty and students may or may not be admitted.

On the selling side are the swollen ranks of the academic reserve army — cadres in their thousands, nay, their tens of thousands — for whom the merest rumor of an opening, be it ever so humble, is sufficient to bring flights of registered airmail applications to the desk of the harried administrator.

Quality lost in shortcuts

Shortcuts are used to search for excellence. The doctorate is basic. Then comes publication. Applicant A (one article, two reviews) has as much chance of edging out Applicant B (three articles, one monograph accepted for publication by Brunch University Press) as does a 215-pound weakling-of-a-linebacker of surviving squad cuts for Rams or Vikes or Steelers.

It was different in the old days when quality used to count. One chairman, told that a promising aspirant was "a two-textbook man," snapped icily. "Did he write them or read them?" Now, he has no time to ask.

So it comes about that some rambling wreck from Georgia Tech whose credentials seem in order is hired in preference to a Canadian Max Weber-in-embryo or Karl Mannheim-in-the-making or Raymond Aron-in-the-rough (where did the spokesman for the University of Toronto in this matter get the idea that "sociology is a discipline . . . conceived in the United States"?) whose sole deficiency is his doctorate and his modest store of citations in the literature.

Such a priority in hiring would be improper if the field in question were as arid ideologically as Turkish grammar or astrophysics. Canadians trained in those as in any other subjects have a right to employment in Canadian universities paid for by Canadian taxpayers to educate Canadian students.

But where the field is sociology, there is more to it than that. Sociology is something else. Sociology is special. Sociology is sensitive.

It is the study of how people behave, and why — a most permissive mandate. The study of almost anything goes. "Sociology can be done in armchairs or in buses, at sidewalk cafes or at university," one of its practitioners admits. "Sociology belongs to familiar scenes, to neighborhoods, gangs and slums."

The sheer fecundity of its material leads all too often to pretentious recitation of the obvious, to preoccupation with what is trite and paltry at the expense of what is pressing and important.

Such excessive trivializing has brought the subject into low repute. "Somewhere in all those piles of papers," remarks a layman emerging from a conference of sociologists, "there must be some residue of insight.

"Its best sample is a paper which indicates that persons who fail to answer sociological questionnaires by mail come from homes where their parents habitually beat them."

Poking fun at schlock sociology is the lowest form of wit. I'm not trying to put the subject down. I'm trying to raise it ot its proper place — as queen of the social sciences, enthroned (along with literature and history) as sovereign over a people's sense of self and worth.

What has been called variously the sociological imagination, the sociological eye, the sociological feel, is crucial in moulding a national consciousness. To allow this civilizing mission to be performed by foreigners is to guarantee the moulding of a consciousness that belongs to foreigners.

An alienated profession

The doyen of Canadian sociologists hits the nail on the head. "In claiming to teach a sociology that knows no national boundaries," Professor S. D. Clark observes, "what really is being taught is American sociology." As sociology goes, so goes the nation.

Has it gone too far to stop? Could it be repatriated? Submissions to the Commission on Canadian Studies are sadly pessimistic. "A number of leading Canadian sociologists expressed the view to the Commission" — so asserts its report, soon to be published — "that the profession was now so totally alienated from Canadian concerns and values that it was time to consider re-inventing sociology as a discipline at one or two selected universities in Canada."

An ambitious experiment. I wish it well. But I would not select the University of Toronto as the place to try to run it.

No time for excellence.

THERE'S NO VOICE IN OTTAWA

Wanted: A Spokesman for the Aged

By RICHARD GWYN

The debate itself seems almost trivial. A week ago, former Prime Minister John Diefenbaker, normally a critic of government spending, proposed a new federal ministry for old people. Health and Welfare Minister Marc Lalonde, when I asked him to comment, dismissed the idea as "a symbolic gesture."

The issue behind the debate is quite something else. It has to do with the place of old people in our society, whether they just survive or whether they contribute, "a natural resource that we squander" as Diefenbaker put it.

Sheer numbers shape part of the issue. Two million Canadians today are 65 years or older; within 15 years there will be nearly three million. Canada is becoming one of the oldest countries in the world. By the end of the century, 11 to 12 per cent of Canadians will be 65 years of age or more; the world average for persons over 60 years old will then be only 9 per cent.

Social attitudes are the more important factor. "The way we treat old people," says Bill Zimmerman, executive director of the Ottawa Social Planning Council, "amounts to saying: 'If you're so smart, how come you're not young'."

A recent report by the World Health Organization found that old people are worse off comparatively in industrial countries than in underdeveloped countries because of, among other reasons, "the traditional support given to the aged in these cultures by members of the family and the community."

In straight material terms Canada's care for the aged compares, in Lalonde's words, "more than favorably with any country's." Within a decade the minimum social security for a retired individual has gone from $65 a month to $187, and now is indexed to inflation. Ontario and British Columbia provide income supplements. Several provinces provide free drugs; denticare started this month in Saskatchewan. In 1970, there were 23,000 dwelling units for the elderly built under the National Housing Act; today there are some 40,000.

Dramatic improvements will be harder to achieve. As old people grow in numbers so does their political influence, but so also does the cost of new programs.

A multitude of specific problems remain: urban transit systems that one expert has called "an obstacle course for the aged," the quality of private nursing homes; the terror of retirement, "almost a taboo subject, like death," says counsellor Frank McGuigan, and one to be shared in the future by career women as well as men.

"The real problem when it comes to the elderly," Toronto Alderman Anne Johnston said recently, "is that we can't legislate caring."

Universities have begun to change. About a dozen have followed the University of Prince Edward Island's lead in offering free courses to those over 65.

Ottawa's instrument for caring is New Horizons. In less than two years the $10-million-a-year program has funded 2,500 projects involving a half-million senior citizens in everything from renovating covered wooden bridges in New Brunswick to a Kingston, Ont., choral group, its average age 75, that took a 22-day concert tour by bus to Victoria.

New Horizons will be expanded, promises Lalonde. It is a decision to applaud, except that elsewhere in Ottawa the Department of Manpower has just abolished its Older Workers policy unit. "They just weren't a high enough priority," explained an official.

A department for the aged isn't needed. The lack instead is of a political spokesman in exactly the same way that Lalonde is responsible for women's interests and Secretary of State Hugh Faulkner for those of youth. Senior citizens, unlike those in the United States, lack also a single national association to speak for them.

TOO MUCH FOR MA BELL

By LAURENT LAPLANTE
Le Devoir, Montreal

It has been observed that the rate increases granted Bell Canada by the Canadian Transport Commission were approved in the context of inflation, Bell's own reduction of demands and pressure applied on the commission.

Even thus analysed, the rate increases still are unacceptable.

Bell Canada has never missed an opportunity to blame the economic situation for its woes. Yet in Bell's case, as with numerous corporations, inflation does not prevent growing profits.

Including subsidiaries, Bell's net income rose to $205 million from $175 million in a year. Net profits for its subsidiaries jumped to $25 million from $11 million.

We note from this that the corporation recovers at least part of the losses to inflation through its subsidiaries. Telephones may cost more, but they are purchased from within the company.

Under the circumstances, it is difficult to invoke inflation as a convincing reason for granting rate increases.

It was felt Bell was turning toward a broader definition of its role as a public servant. The telephone was to be treated as an essential service to be provided to as many people as possible the at lowest cost.

In modifying the original application, Bell reduced its request for increases in residential rates to 10 from 45 cents a month.

It is good that the company better understands its role of public servant, but it does not mean the understanding is complete.

The company continues to conduct some of its most lucrative activities through subsidiaries that are outside government control, permitting it, in effect, to get around the law.

The decision to grant the increase is shocking even though the commission sensibly delayed application of the new rates and modified numerous company demands for the good of the public.

If public and government pressure continues, the telephone will become what it always should have been, a public service.

A Cats-and-Sons Man

RUSSELL BAKER

President Ford is a cat man and has sons. These facts have been overlooked by the political analysts, although nothing else we know about him tells more precisely what a radical departure he is from the main line of modern presidents.

The modern style in presidents has run to daughters and dogs, and while there is nothing wrong with daughters or dogs it is, nevertheless, a fact that daughters-and-dogs men perceive the world quite differently from cats-and-sons man.

We are dealing with what the Nixon people called "input." The input of daughters and dogs is loyalty and affection. Sons and cats, on the other hand, surround a man with reality. Without being dogmatic about this, I suggest that a sons-and-cats president is better off than a daughters-and-dogs president, simply because of the nature of the presidency.

As president, a man automaticlly acquires more loyalty and affection than is good for him; the added bonus from dogs and daughters merely gives him an excess of riches. The reality introduced into his life by cats and sons is likelier to give him a more balanced view of life, for everything else about the presidency conspires to insulate the great man from reality.

It is arguable, for example, that we might have been spared the worst of the Vietnam adventure if any of our previous three presidents had had growing sons in the White House. Instead, we had a run of presidents with loyal, affectionate daughters.

Richard Nixon with two daughters, Lyndon Johnson with two, John Kennedy with one. Kennedy also had a baby son, of course, but he was not of an age to inform his father how the people he went around with felt about making war in Asia.

Both Johnson and Nixon were denied the wisdom that might have flowed from having a draft-age son who had to decide whether he was morally bound to go to war, prison or Canada. Both were denied intelligence reports on the state of the nation's youth which sons might have filtered through the insulation surrounding the White House. And so both became warlike old men sending young men to die while agonizing publicly about their old sufferings. Sons might have saved them.

★ ★ ★

Why have sons been in such short supply in recent presidencies. Since Roosevelt there have been only two in the White House — young John Kennedy and John Eisenhower, who was an army officer while his father was president. His father, it may or may not be interesting to observe, was the least bellicose of the five presidents between Roosevelt and Ford.

There is material here for pop psychologists. Do presidents without sons have to be warlike to establish their machismo? Do politicians who have sons become too humbled by the experience — those middle-aged defeats at Indian wrestling, those failures to stamp the paternal character on its rightful heir — to pursue the presidency with sufficient zest?

Dogs, of course, are as firmly entrenched in political life as the campaign pledge. Famous political dogs of the modern era include Roosevelt's Fala, those beagles Lyndon Johnson picked up by the ears, Nixon's Checkers (deceased before his presidency) and King Timahoe. In American politics it is sound practise to love dogs, whether you love them or not, for the dog vote has almost as much clout at the polls as the gun lobby.

The problem with dogs, if you are president, is that dogs don't criticize. Dogs are always agreeing with you, which is precisely what presidents do not require. They already have too many persons agreeing with them, and the motives of these persons are similar to the motives of the dogs. Dogs, like politicians, realize that a dog that disagrees with his boss doesn't stay around very long.

Humans expect dogs to agree with them. This is why so many people keep dogs. Dogs are famous for agreeability, and most of us are desperate most of the time in our need to be agreed with. So we acquire dogs, and the dogs sit around with their tongues out pretending to smile and showing us in every possible way what splendid people we are.

Cats will not do this. Cats have too much dignity. When a man does something foolish, no cat will hang his tongue out in a loving smile and tell the man he is a splendid fellow. The cat simply looks at the man with contempt, demands to be fed, then tells the man to get out of the armchair because he, the cat, wants to lie down there, and goes to sleep. Cats, in fact, behave this way even when a man does something noble.

A man who keeps a cat is constantly reminded that gratitude is short-lived, that the important things in life are regular meals and periodic bouts of love, and that in the end, no matter how well things seem to be going, there will always be cat hairs on your blue suit.

A president willing to subject himself to this kind of wisdom is preferable to one who prefers constantly being agreed with by dogs. Ford may weather very well.

3 Named to Crime Busters' Board

Three civilians, including former B.C. Supreme Court Chief Justice J. O. Wilson, have been appointed to the board of B.C.'s new "crime busters" unit.

The Co-ordinated Law Enforcement Unit (CLEU) was set up last spring to launch an all-out attack on organized crime in B.C.

Attoreney-General Alex Macdonald announced Tuesday that Wilson, University of B.C. economics professor Stuart Jamieson and Victoria housewife Barbara Sutherland-Brown will join four professionals to make up CLEU's policy board.

Those already appointed are: David Vickers, deputy attorney-general, Dr. Malcolm Matheson, justice development commission vice-chairman, Don Winterton, Vancouver police chief and Ed Willes, RCMP commanding officer in B.C.

The board is responsible for studying the findings of CLEU's research branch and identifying priorities or "targets" for the unit.

Macdonald said he decided to appoint civilians to that board so they can assume a role similar to that of a jury and consider "civil rights and due process of the law."

"I'm not worried about the police operation in terms of the big police" and the suggestion of a police state but nevertheless in an operation like this it's desirable to have a civilian mixture," said Macdonald.

The main areas of organized crime the unit will focus on are narcotics, gambling, loan sharking and commercial or "white collar" crimes, said Macdonald.

He said the police already have a "pretty good idea as to who the gangs are" but do not have the kind of information they need to lay charges.

In B.C. he said, "It's been the cops and robbers thing . . . wait for some crime to happen and then you go out and try to find the malefactor." The unit will attempt "to predict the trend of these things."

For example, in the drug trade, he said, "The little people are being regularly picked up, committed to jail, and it doesn't seem to make much difference to the flow of the narcotics trade."

The policy board is scheduled to receive a preliminary report Sept. 27.

CLEU is made up of several different branches including the policy board, the planning and analysis division, the prosecution division and eventually the Joint Forces Operation, which will be the working investigators.

JFO will be made up of people from the RCMP and municipal forces.

Wilson retired from the B.C. Supreme Court last November after 34 years on the bench.

Jamieson has been a lecturer at UBC since 1945 and once worked as a research director for the CCF party, forerunner of the NDP.

Sutherland has a degree in Commerce from UBC and is the wife of a department of mines official.

KEENLEYSIDE TO REPLY TO $600M HYDRO 'EXCESS'

Former B.C. Hydro chairman Dr. Hugh Keenleyside will issue a statement later this week on charges the Columbia River Treaty will cost B.C. more than $600 million in excess costs.

Keenleyside, who was co-chairman of Hydro from 1962 to 1969 and headed negotiations for the treaty, told the Times Tuesday he did not wish to comment on the charges until he sees the figures himself.

The figures were made public by Premier Barrett earlier this week in a Hydro prospectus.

The prospectus showed B.C. will have to pay about $90 million in excess costs for construction of the three Columbia River dams and another $673 million for construction of the power generating facility at Mica dam.

When the treaty between B.C., Canada and the U.S. was announced in 1964, the former administration said the U.S. would pay B.C. enough money to cover the cost of the dams and pay about half the costs of the Mica generating plant.

GOV'T SPENDING 'NOT SO MUCH'

VANCOUVER (CP) — Industry, Trade and Commerce Minister Alastair Gillespie says that government spends far less than most people realize.

He told a board of trade luncheon Tuesday that direct federal government spending was only 5.7 per cent of the gross national product in 1973, compared with nearly six per cent in 1968.

"For all governments in Canada, direct expenditures are less than 23 per cent," he said.

"What about all those welfare expenses, or UIC (Unemployment Insurance), old age pensions and so forth? What about LIP (Local Initiatives Program) grants and what about transfers to provinces?

"Are they really part of the GNP?" he asked.

"If they go up, does the GNP go up? If they go down, does the GNP go down? No. Then they are not part of the GNP."

"They are transfer payments," said Gillespie." "Transfer payments are society's involvement in social justice."

Bridge Blasted, Hue Isolated

SAIGON (UPI) — Communist frogmen swimming under the cover of darkness blew up a strategic highway bridge early today to isolate the former imperial capital of Hue.

The raid came hours after a Communist patrol ambushed a government convoy northwest of Saigon, temporarily blocking a key road to the threatened provincial capital of Tay Ninh.

The Saigon command said Communist frogmen blew up the Highway 1 bridge over the Rui River this morning to cut off Hue, South Vietnam's third largest city, from its chief source of supplies.

The blast severed Hue's ground link with Da Nang, 50 miles to the south. The estimated 500,000 soldiers and civilians in the Hue area get virtually all their supplies from Da Nang, the nation's second largest city.

Military officers said commanders hope to erect a temporary span later today, reopening the supply road to Hue, 400 miles north of Saigon. Communist troops have fought near the bridge, 20 miles southeast of Hue, for two weeks.

Swim Rulings Sought

TORONTO (CP) — The province will call "a meeting of interested and concerned parties" to look into marathon swims, it was announced Tuesday.

A joint announcement from the ministry of community and social services and the ministry of the solicitor-general said the meeting will consider the need to establish regulations or guides by which future long-distance swims will be regulated.

The announcement said prominent coaches and athletes, the Canadian Red Cross, the Royal Life Saving Society, representatives of swimming associations, the U.S. coast guard and members of appropriate federal and provincial departments will be invited to take part.

The announcement follows the disappearance last Saturday of 17-year-old Neil MacNeil during an attempt to swim Lake Ontario.

The announcement said the solicitor-general's department will examine the results of a police investigation of the swimmer's disappearance.

It's Too Late to Sell But Too Early to Buy

By AL FORREST
Times Business Editor

It is too late to sell those slumping stocks and too early to buy others, according to an investment house study.

The Victoria office of Dominion Securities Harris today distributed a market strategy report which says:

"To sell the market at today's price would presuppose the ability to buy back at a more advantageous price.

"After allowing for commissions, and given the inability to pick the exact market bottom, prices would in our opinion have to decline more than 10 per cent from present levels and stay there long enough for accumulation to justify further liquidation."

The Dow Jones closed Tuesday at 658.17 and the Toronto industrial index slipped to 159.47. A decline of 10 per cent would carry the TSE index down to 144 and the Dow Jones below 600.

The study says it is highly improbable that prices will fall to that level.

"On the other hand, to accumulate stocks aggressively at the present time, foregoing a high return and security, would presuppose a change in investor attitudes which at the time of writing is simply not there."

Investors are better off in other fields at the present time, such as short term prime commercial paper which pays in excess of 11 per cent interest, offers security and allows the investor to about hold his own with inflation, at least before taxes, the study says.

Long term bonds are not as attractive.

If investors are determined to sell just for the sake of unloading a stock, the company says the poorest performers in future are likely to be food processing, transportation and farm equipment.

Those poised to buy could consider distilling companies, banks, steels and selected utilities.

The Victoria office of Odlum Brown and T. B. Read Ltd. is distributing a newsletter with a similar caution against selling stocks at this time if it can be avoided.

"The biggest mistake investors can make is to be panicked into selling good stocks when buyers are on the sidelines and prices are severely depressed as in the case today," the company says.

However, the company believes it is not too early to buy in.

"Prices may be go lower before the current bear market is over. But not much lower," the company says.

Blue chip companies selling below book value are among the best bargains on the board, the report says.

It lists Canadian stocks selling below book value as:

Abitibi, Bank of Montreal, Bell Canada, Bethlehem Copper, Brascan, B.C. Tel, Canadian Pacific, Falconbridge Nickel, Goodyear, IU International, Massey-Ferguson, McIntyre, Westcoast Petroleum and Westcoast Transmission.

Daon

Daon Development Corp. and its subsidiaries report net income of $2.52 million or $1.84 a share for the nine months ended July 31.

This compares with net income of $1.03 million or 81 cents a share for the same period in 1973.

The company declared a third-quarter dividend of five cents a share, payable Oct. 25 to shareholders of record Oct. 10.

Because of high interest rates and a tight money supply, John Poole, president of the real estate development company, said in his report to shareholders the company has adopted a more conservative posture than six months ago and is not utilizing its expanded lines of bank credit.

Peoples

Peoples Department Stores Ltd. has acquired seven Quebec stores from the J. J. Newberry Canadian Ltd. group. They are located in St. Jean, Joliette, Sherbrooke, St. Hyacinthe, Rimouski and two in Montreal.

Ionarc Smelters

Ionarc Smelters Ltd. report a loss of $302,065 or seven cents a share for the six months ended June 30.

This compares with a loss of $74,822 or two cents a share, during the same period last year.

J. A. McLallen, president of the Vancouver-based firm, said in an interim report that the company experienced substantial losses in its refrigeration and automation divisions, mainly due to a lack of sales and resultant build-up of inventories.

Because of a technical fault on a bank loan, reported in the 1973 annual report, Ionarc's U.S. bankers demanded repayment of all money owed.

The company has arranged to sell its refrigeration plant and will sell and lease back its plant and property in New Hampshire, said McLallen.

Canadian Interest Rates Luring U.S. Customers

TORONTO (CP) — Many United States citizens are turning to chartered banks in Ontario border cities to place their savings.

Interviews with banking officials indicate that higher interest rates on fixed-term deposits in U.S. funds are luring the American dollar across the border.

A U.S. resident can place a minimum of $5,000 in U.S. funds in a fixed-term deposit, varying from 30 days to one year, and receive almost double the interest he would get from a U.S. bank for the same amount.

However, the higher rates only apply to deposits in U.S. dollars.

If a U.S. investor converts his dollars into Canadian funds, and then deposits them, he is subject to a 15-per-cent withholding tax. There is no tax on the U.S. dollar deposit because it is collected by the U.S. government.

In addition, interest rates are lower on the Canadian deposits. Bank sources say this is because the U.S. dollar has been at a discount and is not worth as much as the Canadian dollar.

Although there has been substantial interest at border banks and in Toronto, most of the activity seems to be centred in Windsor.

Banks generally are reporting an average of between eight and 20 U.S. dollar fixed-term deposits a day, averaging $10,000 to $20,000 each. The average term is 90 to 180 days.

One bank in Windsor handled 230 inquiries in one day.

A bank employee in Niagara Falls recalls overhearing a U.S. visitor, scanning an advertisement on the bank winlow, say: "Can you believe that — 9.25-per-cent interest."

Recently, a Detroit bank was paying five per cent for 30-to-89-day certificates of deposit worth a minimum of $10,000, 5.5 per cent for 90 to 364 days, six per cent for one year to 2½ years, and 6.5 per cent for terms between 2½ and four years. The four-year rate is 7.25 per cent.

In the same period one Canadian bank offered 11.25 per cent on U.S. dollar fixed-term deposits, with a minimum of $10,000 for 30 to 50 days, 11.5 per cent for 60 to 89 and 90 to 180 days, and 11 per cent for 180 to 364 days. The one-year rate was 10.25 per cent.

The rates fluctuate daily and different banks offer different rates for various terms and minimum deposits. Some banks are, in fact, paying more than 12 per cent.

The basic reason why U.S. rates for deposits less than $100,000 are lower is because of a U.S. Federal Reserve Board regulation which sets maximum rates payable by Federal Reserve System members on these deposits. Not all U.S. banks are members of the system.

The rates on deposits of more than $100,000 are determined by the money market.

BANKER URGES MIDDLE ROAD BETWEEN EXPANSION, RESTRAINT

TORONTO (CP) — A Canadian banker urged the federal government Tuesday to walk the middle road between expansion and restraint in trying to steer the economy on an even course.

Dr. B. V. Gestrin, a vice-president of the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, said some difficult decisions will have to be made between promoting continued growth of the Canadian economy and the stabilization of prices.

Dr. Gestrin said the expansionary approach, followed by the government to date, would only aggravate inflation.

But on the other hand, too much restraint might create a prolonged recession, he said.

Dr. Gestrin was addressing the Toronto chapter of the Financial Executives Institute.

The government's expansionary stance has placed too heavy a burden on the Bank of Canada. If the government held back on its spending, it would stimulate investment and take some pressure off the financial markets, he said.

Canadians can expect that food-price inflation will ease by 1975 and wage settlements can be expected to be higher than average as workers try to recover from the effects of inflation.

The bank's senior economist said the higher wage demands will, however, decrease profits and push prices up. So inflation will ease only slightly, dropping to around nine per cent, he predicted.

Looking towards the future, he said, residential construction will continue to be weak throughout the beginning of next year. Consumer spending will recover somewhat after sagging for the remainder of this year. Export sales will not pick up until Canada's trading partners — the United States, Japan, the United Kingdom — start to show some signs of recovering. Business investment should continue to be strong.

He estimated funds raised by the business sectors from major lenders will total $7.9 billion in 1975, compared with $7.6 billion this year. Bank loans will account for $3.5 billion while bond issues will raise another $1.5 billion of the requirements.

Mortgage borrowing will remain strong, rising to $7 billion next year from $6.6 billion in 1974. Although residential construction will be sluggish, rising real estate prices will stimulate loan demand.

Consumer borrowing will jump to $3.1 billion from $2.9 billion this year.

Interest rates will remain high, he said.

Operating Costs Zip Past New Car Cost in 2 Years

DETROIT (AP) — Worried about the cost of buying a new car. Worry some more about the cost of operating it each year.

While new models will be carrying price tags of $3,000 and up, the additional cost of driving them for a year can run from $2,000 to more than $4,000.

That estimate is based on a study by the Hertz car-rental firm's leasing division, which computed the cost of operating an average car during the first half of 1974. It means a consumer's operating costs will exceed the purchase price of a new model in less than two years.

A typical late-model, mid-size car driven 10,000 miles a year and kept for three years will cost 24 cents a mile to operate. Operating expenses include gasoline, oil, service, parts, repairs, licences and insurance costs, interest and depreciation rates, but not garage rent or road toll fees.

The study said the per-mile cost of operation declines the more miles a car is driven a year and the smaller the car. If the mid-size car, such as a Ford Torino or Oldsmobile Cutlass, is driven 15,000 miles a year, operating costs drop to 18.3 cents a mile.

The per-mile cost of operating a full-size model, such as a Dodge Monaco or Chevrolet Impala, is 29 cents for 10,000 files or $2,900. At 15,000 miles or $2,900. At 15,000 year of 21 cents a mile.

Operating costs for a subcompact, such as an American Motors' Gremlin or Ford Pinto, are 19 cents a mile for 10,000 miles and 14 cents at 15,000 miles.

The study also said operating costs increase if a motorist keeps his car for fewer than three years. Per-mile costs increase an average half-cent if the car is kept two years and increase one cent if the model is traded in after only one year.

Gulf Oil Lab Goes On Tour

GO-CART RIDE TO BIG TIME

ESTEVAN, Sask. (CP) — A go-cart ride at small Prairie carnivals started local brothers Bob and Doug King off on the road to big-time carnivals and fairs in North America.

"It was really an eye-opener," says Bob King, recalling the days with the go-cart in the early 1960s. "People figure it's a pretty easy life working on the midway, but we're dealing with public and five per cent of the people can make things bad."

King Enterprises Inc. now provides stage sets, lighting and sound systems for grandstand shows across Canada and the United States.

Bob, who teaches during the winter, and Doug, master carpenter for the Royal Winnipeg Ballet, moved into the larger fair circuit in 1971 when they bought a major grandstand scenery and lighting company.

"We're incorporated in the states, but we are all Canadians," says Bob. The Kings have three tractor-trailers to cart around their equipment and can operate at three fairs simultaneously. The only operating costs for the $50,000-a-year operation are gas, oil, tires and new scenery.

They make most of their scenery and can usually be seen on spring afternoons painting and constructing sets on the river-bottom flats near this southeastern Saskatchewan community.

Exhibition boards rely on companies like King Enterprises to provide variety in stage shows from year to year.

"Even if it's not brand new each year, we at least paint the sets," says Bob.

Despite the tight schedules and long hours of driving, he calls show business work "the greatest."

"We keep running into entertainers and carnival people in spot after spot across the contisent. We don't become really good friends, but we know them. If we're within 500 miles of someone's home, they're insulted if you don't stop by."

Vegetable Prices to Jump 15-20%

By AL FORREST
Times Staff
(Third in a series)

Vegetable prices are expected to go up between 15 and 20 per cent this winter with the largest jump in potatoes.

No shortage is expected except for the temporary scarcities that develop in November between completion of local crops and arrival of imports from California.

Starting in November, the price of potatoes is expected to rise from its present level of 10 pounds for 69 cents to 10 pounds for $1.

At the same time, cauliflower is expected to move toward 59 cents a head, from 49 cents.

Cabbage should hold in the 10 to 15 cents a pound range until late in November. Lettuce prices are expected to move up in October.

Tomatoes are fairly scarce but this is expected to be countered by dumping of low-priced Mexican and California tomatoes in B.C. this fall.

The price increase estimate was made by Geoff Vantreight, president of the Island Vegetable Co-op, representing the growers, and was confirmed by wholesaler Wayne Bryan, produce manager for W. H. Malkin Ltd.

"There is no doubt the prices will go up and 15 to 20 per cent seems to be about right," Bryan said.

"This is an estimate based upon the crop condition. Some people think there is some kind of manipulation in vegetable prices, but it's not true. It is one area where the law of supply and demand works perfectly."

The chief unknown factor is the weather.

"I once lost 30 acres of cauliflower because of an early frost," Vantreight said.

"And Vancouver Island farmers still remember Nov. 11, 1955, when it suddenly went down to 5 above. It was incredible. It killed just about everything."

Early frosts are already proving troublesome on the Prairies, creating a possible long-term problem for the local potato supply.

"In the winter we import quite a few potatoes from Alberta, Saskatchewan and Manitoba but there will be fewer available this year. Farmers are shifting potato fields to wheat because of good prices. And then there's the frost problem."

Washington State, another major source of imported potatoes, has a fairly good crop, although it is about 10 per cent lower in volume than last year.

Vancouver Island production is normal. However, all crops are a little slow because of the wet spring.

While price increases are on the way, present prices are holding at 1973 levels or slightly lower.

Price increases are the normal trend in the fall, although heavy imports sometimes bring the price back to summer levels. This is not expected this year.

Local produce goes up in price because farmers have to add storage charges after the crop is picked. Imported produce can be expensive because of freight costs, although sometimes surplus vegetables are dumped at cost.

Inter-City Body Rejects Rentalman's Aid Appeal

Greater Victoria Intermunicipal Committee voted solidly Tuesday against a suggestion by B.C. Rentalsman Barrie Clark that municipal staff should be used to help his office in local investigatory work.

The recommendation for rejection came from administrators of the seven municipalities concerned, who disputed Clark's claim that "no great demands" would be made on the time of municipal staff.

In a memorandum, the officials noted that the present Landlord and Tenant Advisory Bureau which Greater Victoria municipalities support is a full-time operation staffed by two people.

At least in the case of the city of Victoria, they said, investigations would be "a time-consuming function" as the city has more than 17,000 apartments.

Oak Bay Mayor Brian Smith, whose council voted Monday to co-operate with the rentalsman's office, said he felt council would have decided otherwise if it had had such information available.

He indicated he would ask fellow council members to reverse their decision.

The resolution endorsed by the intermunicipal committee, which now goes to member municipalities for approval, says the rentalsman should consider hiring "one or more individuals" with experience in landlord-tenant matters as investigators for the Greater Victoria area.

It says B. K. Wallace, manager of the Landlord and Tenant Advisory Bureau to be wound up Oct. 1, appears an "excellent candidate" for the job.

SAANICH CAT BYLAW SCRATCHED

Cats in Saanich are purring with relief today.

On the advice of municipal solicitor Doug Patterson, the finance, legislative and health committee decided Tuesday to recommend to council throwing out the controversial section in the Animals Bylaw which calls for the impounding straying cats.

Feline-fanciers have been fighting the offending section for months, claiming it put cats in unwarranted jeopardy every time they stepped off ther owners' properties.

Chairman Joe Bourque told the committee Patterson "questioned if the bylaw could be legally defended".

Meanwhile, some of Saanich's birds had better beware. And, run rabbit run, might even be good advice.

At Tuesday's meeting the committee endorsed Patterson's recommendations to amend the Firearms Bylaw to allow Saanich police to shoot rabbits, crows, English sparrows, Japanese or English starlings, and magpies.

Property owners may also have the same privilege, providing they have a licence from the Saanich police and the provincial fish and wildlife department.

BEFORE THE JUDGE

A man who snatched back a beer bottle seized by a police officer was fined $100 in Victoria provincial court Tuesday.

Hubert Edward De Forge, 33, of 1611 Pembroke, pleaded guilty to obstructing a policeman.

The officer had picked up the bottle while patrolling the Sooke potholes July 26.

De Forge took the bottle from the officer and blocked his attempt to retrieve it.

The marijuana plant "seems to be replacing the geranium as an apartment plant," Judge William Ostler concluded after a youth pleaded guilty to possessing marijuana.

Ostler fined Christopher Neil Carter, 17 or 1422 Fernwood, $75.

Prosecutor Mike Hutchison said police found marijuana plants in three containers Monday at Carter's apartment.

Ostler also fined Rene Robert Henry Payne, 25, of 2065 Carrick, $100 for possessing six marijuana plants found Aug. 28 growing on his back porch.

In other drug cases, Michael William Lusk, 20, of 1024B Pandora, and Allan Vincent Joseph, 21, of Port Alberni, were each fined $75 for possessing marijuana.

Mike Geric Construction Ltd., 4253 Thornhill, was fined $200 on a charge laid under the Income Tax Act for not sending to the government $403.62 that had been withheld or deducted from payments made to employees during February.

Stephen Kaminsky, 52, of 2659 Douglas, was given a 24-day jail sentence to serve on weekends and banned from driving for six months for impaired driving.

For the same offence, Donald Tefrery Quaite, 38, of 671 Hoy Lake, was fined $350 and banned from driving for one month; Roy William Wilhelmsen, 42, of 701 Esquimalt, was fined $375 and banned for 45 days; Ronald Muselow, 30, of 1761 Haultain, was fined $375 and banned 75 days; Peter James Reakes, 51, of 2623 Richmond, was fined $375 and banned for a month, and Alfred John Norman, 17, of 1083 Redfern, was fined $400 and banned for six months, and fined another $300 for failing to remain at the scene of an accident.

Leo Overby, 19, of 3344 Hazelwood, was given a one-month jail term and banned from driving for two years for driving while under suspension, a concurrent one-month sentence for being in the care or control of a car while impaired, and another concurrent sentence of 10 days for driving while not insured.

Six Arrests, Man Cleared

A Victoria man who claimed in provincial court here last week he had been arrested six times for the same offences, was cleared of the charges in Vancouver earlier this week.

John Henry Wiebe, 101 Battleford, had been charged with driving without insurance and failing to produce proof of valid insurance in 1972 at Vancouver.

The case was dismissed, lawyer Brian McAsey said Tuesday, after the Crown produced no evidence.

McAsey told Judge William Ostler last Wednesday Wiebe had been unable to attend court originally because he had been in jail.

Ostler waived the case to Vancouver, where the charge had been laid.

Walking Papers $20 Envelope

McKAY

By DON VIPOND
Times Staff

Three sisters in the "traditional" faction of the Society of the Love of Jesus last year were handed "their walking papers" — an envelope for each with $20 in it — their lawyer said Tuesday in B.C. Supreme Court.

In the subsequent seven-month "sit-in" the trio conducted at St. Mary's Priory in Langford, all the society gave them was the heating and lighting supplied the priory building, counsel Hugh McMillan added.

He is representing the five sisters, led by Mother Cecilia Mary, who make up the so-called "traditional" faction in the internal dispute. They are suing for control of the society, run by the "modern" faction and with assets estimated at $1.5 million.

The case opened before Mr. Justice H. C. McKay Tuesday at the Law Courts and is expected to take at least two weeks. Cecil Branson is representing the society.

"And this was a Christian community?" the judge asked, after hearing how both factions hired their own security guards during the sit-in.

It was the security guards hired by the "modern" faction who handed Sisters Mary Agnes Eaton, Mary Josephine Donovan and Mary Lucy Forde the envelopes after the three had been locked from all but a basement kitchen in the priory in March of last year, McMillan said.

He estimated the society must have paid about $20,000 for the security guards it hired through the sit-in.

The traditional faction claims there are five fundamental differences separating the two groups, said McMillan:

—the traditionalists, who still wear the black habit, hold that their work must not interfere with their religious life.

—there are differences in the way the two groups observe the divine office.

—two of the "modern" group receive and keep salaries earned as nurses, contrary to the "traditional" group's observance of poverty.

—the modern group has failed to recognize that in a community of this kind the society provides for members' needs.

—a long-standing tradition that no male be permitted to stay overnight in the priory has been changed by the modern faction.

McMillan reviewed the history of the society, formed by Mother Cecilia in Vancouver in 1922 and later incorporated as an Anglican order of the Benedictine Sisters.

Mother Cecilia later led the society into the Roman Catholic Church and in 1942 moved to Victoria, eventually settling at 567 Goldstream where the priory and another hospital were launched as well as a home for senior citizens.

She was mother prioress for almost 40 years, until she resigned the position in 1961 to operate an animal shelter, now located at Mill Bay.

Problems within the society began following 1961, McMillan said, when its work declined under the new prioress, moving Mother Cecilia to eventually write Rome requesting appointment of a new prioress. At its peak, the society had about 38 sisters working.

McMillan said the society was made "sort of secular" through a meeting held in August, 1965, when Sister Leonette Hoesing, now mother prioress, came from Convent of the Sacred Heart at Yankton, S.D.

Bishop Remi de Roo had told the meeting that Sister Hoesing had been appointed to head the society, but the bishop also wanted the sisters to formally elect her, McMillan said.

Mother Cecilia objected, wanting a list of eligible sisters prepared and two weeks to consider the matter, but Sister Hoesing was elected.

The following year there was a "great exodus" of the sisters from the priory operation, and the trio who eventually staged the sit-in had difficulties returning to the priory after being sent to other religious communities, McMillan said.

Leonette's re-election as prioress was opposed again in 1971 by the "traditional" faction, which walked out of the meeting when its objections were turned down. The validity of the election was subsequently tested and upheld in court.

McMillan said that on March 15, 1973, Sisters Eaton and Donovan, who were living in the priory, were confronted by Mother Julia Hunhoff, head of the Yankton congregation, in company with Sister Leonette, and told "to go their own way."

The priory doors were locked but the sisters still got in, were later joined by Sister Forde, and began their sit-in.

Earlier that month the society had bought a house on the other side of Goldstream, subsequently designated the new priory.

McMillan said the plaintiffs hold that Mother Hunhoff has no jurisdiction over them and that Sister Leonette has done one of two things — founded a new community across the road or abandoned St. Mary's.

None of the traditional sisters have been dismissed from the society, he said, and in fact believe they are the only society members in good standing.

The three sisters in the modern faction are no longer members because they have absented themselves too long and Sister Leonette never was a society member, according to McMillan.

The trial continues.

Less Bias Asked On Marina Study

By LIZ HUGHES
Times Staff

Both federal and provincial governments have been asked to hold up approval permits for the planned Saanichton Bay Marina, a department of Indian Affairs official said today.

Clarence Riach, economic development officer for the south Vancouver Island Indian Affairs district, told the Times letters have been sent to both levels of government asking that no approval be given until additional studies are done on the impact of the marina on the Tsawout Indian Band, adjacent to the proposed marina.

"It's our feeling that the Indian interests have not really been dealt with in enough depth and we've asked that any decision be held up until we can do more research."

Riach said the department would either hire its own private consultant to do additional studies or rely on Environment Canada research.

"We feel there is a need for more neutral appraisal with more consideration for the Indians.

"We also feel the consultants who did the present studies may have been a bit biased," Riach said.

The "most studied marina in the province" ran into even stronger opposition at a five-hour meeting Tuesday night between the marina developers, consultants, Central Saanich council and the Tsawout Band.

Studies a 'Blind Facade'

"The studies are an insult and a blind facade," charged Philip Paul, director of land claims for the Union of B.C. Indian Chiefs.

"It seems our co-existence is a happy one as long as we say nothing, but we are no longer going to take that quiet approach to development," Paul said.

The 1,130-berth marina is planned by Saanichton Bay Marina Ltd. developers Bob Wright and George Wheaton who sat quietly during four hours of heavy criticism of their plans.

Two environmental studies and one social impact study have already been completed and all show no major problems in the development.

Indian Band manager Gus Underwood Jr., spoke to the meeting in Central Saanich council chambers for about three hours and criticized aspects of the marina from the pollution it would cause to the "pristine beauty" it would disturb.

Underwood charged that the interests of the Indian people on the East Saanich reserve have not been taken into account in the reports.

Both Underwood and Paul said the land the proposed marina will occupy may really belong to the Indians. They said validity of a treaty signed in 1852 giving the land to Sir James Douglas may be challenged.

Underwood said the band would retain a lawyer and fight the marina plans in court, if necessary.

It was revealed at the meeting that the Indians themselves had planned a marina for the area several years ago, "but we decided against it for the same reasons we are fighting this marina," Underwood said.

The first environmental report done by Dr. Jack Littlepage, an oceanographer, states there is "no evidence of major recreational use of the bay."

But, Underwood said, the Indians use it for fishing, swimming, hunting, shellfishing and boating.

Developer Bob Wright assured the meeting that the creek access would not be blocked by the marina and that if the water supply was short, it would be severely rationed at the marina.

Wheaton, Wright's partner, said he was sorry to see the atmosphere of "suspicion, prejudice and hostility" at the meeting.

"If we have differences we should be able to sit down and talk them out," he said.

Future Uncertain —600% Tax Hike

Three Metchosin residents whose taxes on a jointly-owned piece of land rose nearly 600 per cent this year, told the Assessment Appeal Board Tuesday they may not be able to keep their land if taxes remain as they are.

Bob Jones, speaking for himself, his wife Tish and Barbara Grantham, co-owners of 33 acres on Neff Road, said the taxes have thrown their budget "completely out of kilter and we have to wonder now if we can afford to keep our land."

Jones told the three-man board, chaired by Victoria lawyer Dean Wilson, that he had no intention of using the land for speculative purposes or subdivision.

"It's purely to live on," Jones said.

The three-man appeal board was appointed by the provincial government to rule on tax appeals. The board is the next step in the appeal procedure after the Court of Revision.

Jones, his wife and Grantham bought the land in 1971 for $19,000.

In 1972, they paid $68.10 in taxes; they paid $77.06 in 1973.

Their land was re-assessed this year under the Assessment Equalization Act, and their taxes "skyrocketed", Jones said, to $545.50, an increase of nearly 600 per cent. cent.

"It's high, rocky land, unsuitable for agriculture or for any kind of subdivision."

The property has neither water nor hydro services, he said.

He told the board he had started building a house on the land, but is holding it up now until he knows the outcome of the tax appeal.

"I think we are being viewed as speculators but that's just not so.

"We bought the land because it had the living room we wanted and the privacy."

Aubrey Jenkins, acting as agent for Jones and Grantham, said he felt the actual market value of the land was about $25,300, not $55,000, the value set by the assessor.

The board will rule on the case within a month.

BCFP Lays Off 55, 15 More on Monday

British Columbia Forest Products has laid off 55 workers from its plywood mill on Gorge Road and will lay off another 15 Monday, plywood mill manager Walter Pumfrey said today.

All 70 men will hold job interviews Friday with officials of Canada Manpower in an effort to find immediate work or retraining.

They have been offered employment in other B.C. Forest Products mills in B.C. but most are expected to seek work on the Island.

The layoff was scheduled for Monday but 55 of the men had to be laid off early because of a strike of truck drivers which cut off supplies of veneer from the company's Youbou plant.

The strike was settled Tuesday, one day too late to prevent the early layoff. The 55 men would have been laid off Sept. 16 in any event.

Reason for the layoff is the declining market for wood products. However, no further layoffs are anticipated in the plywood mill in the near future. Remaining employment level after Monday will be 210 plus office help and weekend casual labor.

A layoff is being considered at the main sawmill, which employs a peak of 550 but no decision has been made on the timing.

Total number of persons laid off across B.C. in the forest industry is 8,181, according to the latest estimate by the Council of Forest Industries.

Of this total, 3,132 are on the coast, including the Victoria layoffs, and 5,049 are in the interior.

In addition, another 628 are likely to be laid off on the coast and another 450 in the interior before winter, according to the council's study. This would bring the layoff total to 9,259.

Main reason for the layoffs is the declining lumber market in the United States, the main customer for B.C.'s forest industry.

The layoff total across B.C. has increased 1,200 since Aug. 27, Gordon Draeseke, president of the council, said.

Kevan Hull says 'It's a matter of loving them'

In Class by Himself

Kevan Hull is learning to tie shoelaces all over again this fall, at Quadra elementry school.

Hull, a former sports reporter, has become the only male kindergarten teacher in Greater Victoria School District.

Quadra has 35 kindergarten students in the mornings this year, too many for regular teacher Betty Scott to handle on her own.

So Hull, who normally teaches Grade 7, is helping her out. In the afternoons he teaches physical education.

He said today he's doing some reading up on teaching kindergarten but so far hasn't found dealing with five-year-olds too difficult.

"Mostly it's a matter of loving them," he said. "And I'm learning to tie shoelaces all over again!

He said he thinks it's good for children to have male as well as female teachers, particularly at Quadra which has a number of fatherless families.

"Children need models of both male and female adults in their school life at all levels," Hull said.

ASK THE TIMES

Q: When was the first recorded strike — outside of the one led by Lysistrata B. H.

A: Reference books do not list a precise date, although some slave revolts in ancient times might be characterized as strikes. The only firm date in one reference book concerned the United States where it was said that the earliest recorded strike occurred in 1776 among journeymen printers in New York for an increase in wages. Unions did not become numerous in Britain until the 18th century although there were occasional journeymen's combinations in the 16th and 17th centuries. Lysistrata, a character in the Greek comedy by Aristophanes, after the men failed to bring war to an end, organized the women "by obliging the men to continence." Finally, peace was made and a banquet held "each man with his wife."

Price Surge in Anti-Freeze Squeeze

By AB KENT
Times Staff

Victoria area motorists soon will be playing anti-freeze roulette at service stations and auto supply stores.

A Times survey today showed prices this season range from a low of $4.95 a gallon for a few lucky customers to a staggering $11.

A so-called shortage of winter engine coolant in B.C. and some other parts of Canada has more than doubled last year's prices in many cases locally, with the average retail cost this week hovering at $8.75.

But there are indications the shortage, which began to develop last season as a side effect of the U.S. fuel crisis, may be somewhat artificial this winter.

Some Victoria dealers have been offered virtually unlimited stocks of anti-freeze, but at an exhorbitant wholesale price.

A survey of 12 outlets shows few, if any, have taken up the offer which comes from an independent supplier claiming to have 100,000 gallons of anti-freeze for which he is asking between $7 and $8.50 a gallon.

Coupled with the fact that normal stocks of house brand anti-freeze to major oil company outlets have been slow in coming, the popular notion of a shortage is keeping prices up.

Half the dealers questioned expect stocks to be adequate or normal this season. The others were either unsure of what they would be getting in or are persuaded the shortage is real and that stocks will be marginal.

All but one of the dealers surveyed have anti-freeze in stock and one Texaco dealer was still selling to regulars at the old price of $4.95 until last year's stock is exhausted.

Brian Holley Motors Ltd., which sold anti-freeze last year for $4.50 a gallon, expects to have "enough for our own customers" this season at $11 a gallon. But if freezing weather hits "it'll go like candy."

Oil company representatives told Holley Motors dealers may have 75 per cent of anti-freeze stock they carried last year. That assurance and the fact there was "quite a bit left over" from the old stock should allow for adequate supplies.

Douglas Shell, on the other hand, has been led to believe there will be "about a three-year shortage" of anti-freeze. They will sell the house brand for between $8 and $9 when the shipment arrives and meanwhile offer another brand at $9.85 retail.

There is no concern about stocks at Colwood Home, where the house brand will cost $9 over the counter, or $7 for a subsidiary line, nor at Trans-Canada Texaco, which raised its 1973 price of $4.95 to $8.50 a gallon.

Woolco last year sold anti-freeze for less than $3 a gallon. This year they are limiting customers to two gallons each at $6.88.

Woodward's is nearly out of stock but normal quantities are expected and will sell at $7.98 a gallon, up from $3.79. Sales are limited to four gallons a customer.

Unlike previous years, Woodward's will not have a house brand because it gave the store a "bad name" last year when anti-freeze bootleggers bought cheaply in B.C. and resold at inflated prices in Alberta using the Woodward's label.

At Simpsons-Sears anti-freeze stock is depleted and supplies are "harder than hell to buy right now." The station has been told manufacturers are holding stocks which last year retailed for $3.99-$4.99 a gallon and would be releasing part-orders.

Meanwhile, Simpsons-Sears has rejected an offer of $7 wholesale antifreeze, which would have had to be retailed at $13 a gallon.

Pros Find a Leader And Outsnap Juniors

SASKATOON (CP) — An ancient but far from decrepit Gordie Howe showed the juniors and the pros how Thursday night as Team Canada '74 defeated the Western Canada All Stars 6-1 in preparation for a series against Russia.

GORDIE HOWE

Howe, 46, scored three goals, tossed his weight around with abandon, and provided the leadership Team Canada must receive in the eight-game set with Russia which starts Sept. 17 at Quebec City.

A record crowd of 4,742 watched Howe's every move. He grew up here and was born at nearby Floral.

It was by far the most snappish exhibition game and included the first fighting majors.

Kim Clackson, a junior defenceman with the Victoria Cougars, tangeld with Serge Bernier near the All Stars nets with 15 seconds remaining. Each drew a major.

Clackson baited Marc Tardiff, who scored one goal, into an earlier penalty.

Coach Billy Harris of Team Canada said the fight proved his contention that the pros should not retaliate against the Russians.

"We will be frustrated if the officiating is inconsistent, as it will be," he said. "We will be under pressure and we simply must not retaliate. But it's difficult to change the habits of players accustomed to the Canadian tradition of retaliation."

Harris said some players have controlled themselves better than others in the exhibition series against the juniors, but "there is still some way to go."

Mike Walton scored two Team Canada goals, one on a classical move around defenceman Pat Price and the other on a quick slap that trickled through the pads of goalie Ed Staniowski.

Staniowski faced 41 shots compared with 17 by Gerry Cheevers.

"We had some cohesion," said defenceman Pat Stapleton of his Team Canada mates.

"We let the puck do the work; we finally did things quickly enough to keep the juniors off us."

The only junior goal was scored by Dale McMullin late in the second period.

Team Canada winger Paul Henderson was hurt when he skated into the boards and left the game in the second period. However, the hero of the 1972 victory over Russia returned for the third period.

Another leading left winger, Bobby Hull, was in Winnipeg recovering from a minor knee injury, and a third, Frank Mahovolich, was not dressed.

The exhibition series ends Thursday in Edmonton.

Weak Opening-Race Effort Followed by Strong Words

NEWPORT, R.I. (AP) — Fog, which blanketed the Newport area today, forced postponement for 24 hours of the second heat in the America's Cup, the trophy for 12-metre yachts which has been held by the United States for 123 years.

NEWPORT, R.I. (AP) — An Australian real estate promoter made it known months ago he would spend as much as $9 million to dislodge the America's Cup from the United States.

He also may add to his money a few more strong words aimed at the U.S. crew manning the Courageous.

Alan Bond already has spent an estimated $6 million in his challenge to win the 123-year-old Cup, but in Tuesday's first race in a best-of-seven series, his gold-colored Southern Cross went down in shocking defeat.

Courageous, with crack helmsmen Ted Hood and Dennis Connor in control, outdistanced the Aussie challenger by four minutes and 54 seconds in light wind and came home at least one-half mile ahead.

The two boats were to race the second heat beginning at 12:10 p.m. today over a 24.3-mile course seven miles offshore in Rhode Island Sound.

"We're not discouraged," Bond said after the first race.

"The crew hasn't lost its confidence. We made some purely human errors, and we won't make them again in the next race."

But Bond saved his strongest words for Connor. He accused the American of shouting such phrases as "false start, false start" as the two boats manoeuvred around the starting line.

"I don't know what he was trying to do, or to prove, but if he does it again, I'm going to file a protest," Bond said.

Better sailing weather was expected for today's start. The forecast was for winds up to 16 knots, giving both boats a chance to operate at peak efficiency.

The start of the first race was delayed by heavy fog on Rhode Island Sound and the two yachts didn't get away until 2:10 p.m., the latest possible time they could have started under the terms of the match.

The Americans have successfully defended the Cup 21 times since it was brought to this country in 1851 and over that time have won 67 races to only seven by all the challengers combined.

The Southern Cross was touted to be the first formidable challenger the Americans have had to face. But after the first one-sided contest, many veteran yachtsmen feel the Cup will remain in this country for another three years at least.

Connor won the manoeuvring that went on just before the signal to begin the race.

Connor forced Southern Cross over the starting line before the gun and then dipped back and crossed two seconds ahead on a starboard tack while Southern Cross was going over on port tack at the other end of the line.

For the first few minutes of the race it appeared the Australian boat was sailing slightly faster in the 10-knot breeze.

But as the wind lightened, Hood began to move Courageous away from Southern Cross and rounded the first mark with a 34-second lead. The Aussie never recovered.

HEADING OFF in different directions from starting line, United States' Courageous (left) and Australian challenger Southern Cross launch America's Cup series off Newport, R.I. Start of Tuesday's race was delayed two hours because of fog and light winds, but Courageous marked up easy victory once yachts got green light. (AP Wirephoto).

Room Shortage Stymies Writers

HELSINKI (Reuter) — Finnish hockey writers were refused visas to cover the Izvestia Trophy game between Finland and the Soviet Union which opened Europe's premier tournament in Moscow Tuesday.

A spokesman for the Finnish Ice Hockey Federation said the official reason for denying the visas was the acute shortage of hotel space.

IF YOU LOOK AT THE BOOK, CANUCKS ARE LIKE COUGARS

By JIM CRERAR
Times Staff

Any similarity between the Vancouver Canucks and the Victoria Cougars is purely coincidental, as they used to say in the old days of radio thrillers, but it's right there in the records. You can look it up.

Last year, the Canucks switched coaches in mid-season and finished second-last in their division of the National Hockey League.

Last year, Victoria Cougars switched coaches in mid-season and finished second-last in their division of the Western Canada Junior League.

Both coaches, Phil Maloney of the Canucks and Pat Ginnell of the Cougars, got improved performances once they took over. And now that they're starting their first full term at the helm, both are aiming at the same target — one notch higher in the standings than necessary to make the playoffs.

In the case of the Canucks, who opened training today when 30 amateur aspirants took their medical checkups at Juan de Fuca Arena, it's not as outlandish an idea as you might think.

Noting that the NHL's realignment puts his club in a five-team division with Chicago Black Hawks, Minnesota North Stars, St. Louis Blues and the new Kansas City Scouts, Maloney is prepared to concede only to Chicago. That would leave Canucks second with three teams making the playoffs.

PHIL MALONEY

The records show, with abundant clarity, where Canucks must improve to get that high. With 296 goals against, they had the third-leakiest defence in the league last year. That was better only than the 319 goals yielded by Detroit Red Wings and the 342 by the California Golden Seals, who spent the entire season masquerading as a big league hockey club down by San Francisco Bay and in the process nearly fell out of the bottom of the Western Division.

You can be certain, then, that Maloney will pay particular attention to the defencemen this week. The pick of the crop could be Harold Snepts from Edmonton Oil Kings, one of three juniors drafted by the Canucks last spring. The others were forwards Ron Sedlbauer from Kitchener Rangers and Andy Spruce from London Knights.

Maloney will get help evaluating the rookies from Larry Popein, named the Canucks' western scout after New York Rangers bounced him as coach last January with 1½ years left on his contract.

The Canucks shift their camp to Memorial Arena next Monday, at which time the pros will report.

Veteran Orland Kurtenbach may not be among them.

Seattle Totems, Vancouver's Central League affiliates, want him as coach to replace Rudy Filion, now scouting for Phoenix of the World Hockey Association. Kurtenbach, however, has a year left on his playing contract and is dickering with Vancouver's new owners, Standard Broadcasting Ltd., for a settlement.

ORLAND KURTENBACH

Canucks play two preseason games at Memorial — Sept. 21, a Saturday, against Los Angeles Kings and Sept. 29, a Sunday, against Pittsburgh Penguins. They also play three games in Vancouver — Sept. 25 and 26 against Philadelphia Flyers and Sept. 28 against Pittsburgh — and one in Los Angeles against the Kings Oct. 2.

Mariners Succeed

(Times News Services)

The World Hockey Association announced Tuesday that its Mariners have won a court decision that will allow the team to remain in San Diego this season.

A statement by the WHA said a San Diego court had issued a restraining order forbidding the city to interfere with a lease awarded by San Diego Sports Arena to the Mariners.

San Diego city council had objected to the WHA club moving into the arena which had been built with city funds. Arena operator Peter Graham, who holds a 45-year lease on the nine-year-old building, gave the Mariners a three-year lease.

The Mariners have moved three times and changed their name four times since the WHA started two years ago. The club was first known as New York Raiders, later changed to New York Golden Blades and last season became New Jersey Knights.

Elsewhere in hockey, the Quebec Major Junior League announced it will take steps to curb excessive fighting which has been featured in early exhibition games this season.

League president Raymond Lagace announced that an aggressor in a fight will receive an automatic game misconduct as well as any other penalties he may incur. In addition, when two players wish to continue a fight after they have been separated once, they will be given game misconducts.

★ ★ ★

Two former Western Canada League standouts figured in other hockey developments Tuesday.

New York Islanders of the National League acquired centre Bob Bourne from Kansas City Scouts. With Saskatoon Blades last season, Bourne was the Scouts' third-round choice in the amateur draft and was dealt to Islanders in exchange for defenceman Larry Hornung, now playing with Winnipeg Jets of the WHA, and a player to be named before the start of the regular season.

Phoenix Roadrunners of the WHA have signed right winger Dan Mandryk, a graduate of Calgary Centennials. Mandryk, chosen in the 12th round by Phoenix but Detroit Red Wings' third-round pick, signed a three-year contract with the Roadrunners.

★ ★ ★

Roger Lemelin, a six-foot-three, 195-pound defenceman with London Knights of the Ontario Junior League, has signed with Kansas City. He was the Scouts' fourth-round pick.

Bill Needham, former coach of Cleveland Crusaders of the WHA, has been named coach of Roanoke Rebels of the Southern League. He succeeds Greg Pilling, who resigned earlier to become coach and general manager of Philadelphia Firebirds of the North American League.

Jet Captain Ends Career

WINNIPEG (CP) — Ab McDonald, a 17-year veteran of professional hockey, has announced his retirement as a player.

McDonald, 38, who played 762 games during 15 years in the National Hockey League and 147 World Hockey League contests in the last two seasons as captain on Winnipeg Jets, said he just doesn't have the desire to enter another season.

"I'm finding it harder and harder to push myself," said McDonald, who appeared in four stanley cup finals.

Trimming Time for Cats But Pat First With Cuts

It's haircut day today in the Victoria Cougar camp but manager-coach Pat Ginnell got the jump on his players by doing a little trimming himself Tuesday.

He cut the Western Canada Junior Hockey league roster from 97 to 65 after workouts at the Racquet Club. Most of them were younger aspirants who Ginnell felt would be better off back in school and playing midget or junior "B" hockey.

Ginnell gave any players with beards or long hair until today to visit the barber.

"If they want to be athletes, they're going to look like athletes," he explained.

Among those making early departures was Cougars' only European candidate, 17-year-old forward Jarl Bjorquist from Stockholm. Touted by his sister during a recent visit to Thompson, Man., he was brought to camp in Victoria because Ginnell wasn't able to scout him in either Thompson or Flin Flon owing to lack of ice. Bjorquist showed little promise, Ginnell said, and was sent home before he was injured.

Ginnell, meanwhile, hopes to hear from returning centre Al McLaren today. McLaren has enrolled at UVic and is undecided about his hockey future.

Defenceman Gordie Roberts arrived for today's workouts. A first-round pick in the midget draft, the 17-year-old drove west from his Detroit home but was delayed by car trouble in Seattle.

Ginnell, who likes players of the rough and tough variety, must have enjoyed Tuesday's afternoon session. Newcomers Greg Miazga, a 19-year-old centre from the University of Waterloo, left winger Curt Fraser, a 16-year-old from Kelowna Buckaroos, and right winger Don Cairs, 19, from Calgary, were involved in four fights during the two-hour session but still found time to score seven goals.

Workouts will continue at a two-a-day clip at the Racquet Club. Cougars move into Memorial Arena Monday.

Fluids, Salt Vital to Joggers

TORONTO (CP) — Long-distance, hot-weather joggers should drink lots of liquids and take extra salt, the director of the Toronto Rehabilitation Centre says.

Terry Kavanaugh who has studied the effects of fluid loss on trained joggers, says problems can develop when people lose body fluids through perspiration because the body chemistry doesn't adjust quickly enough.

A group of his trained joggers, aged 32 to 56, and five members of the Metro Joggers, were divided into three groups and jogged 26 miles to test reactions to different fluid solutions.

The men jogged through a series of checkpoints gulping down electrolyte solutions of either potassium or sodium or just water. At the same time they were clocked and their weight loss and blood pressure were recorded to see which solution kept the body chemistry balanced and prevented excessive weight loss.

Weight loss through jogging is initially dangerous because vital sodium and potassium is lost through perspiration.

Results of the tests still have not shown definitely what solution prevents the most weight loss. The usual loss without fluid intake would be between eight and 10 pounds — a dangerous shock to the system.

The men under Kavanaugh's care at the centre have had one or two heart attacks in past years. They now work out for an hour five times a week and jog to keep in shape.

Summer Student Staff Aiding Wildlife Branch

Summer student help is starting to provide fish and wildlife branch biologists with some actual management data on Vancouver Island.

During a recent chat at regional headquarters in Nanaimo, Island fisheries biologist George Reid explained ways which the student program has helped his department.

Some of them are involved in a three-year study, which has one more summer to run.

"A lot of this is just getting basic information," said Reid.

"Inventory comes first, of course, and then the second thing that comes along is improvement work and habitat protection."

On the south end of the Island, the initial stage is nearly finished and work has started on an evaluation of stocking.

The branch stocking program involves three main sizes of rainbow trout — 500 fish per pound, 50 per pound and fish of catchable size.

"We need to find out the growth rates, the return to the fisherman and the mortality rate of the various sizes," George explained.

Although most of the stocking program centres on rainbows, Reid admitted:

"I don't think there's any doubt that the lakes on Vancouver Island are more suitable for cutthroat."

Most Island lakes are very low in nutrients and have been likened to mere catch-basins for rain.

"Vancouver Island lakes are very unproductive," said Reid. "Thank God we've got the salt-chuck fishing — it takes a lot of our fishing pressure away.

"Otherwise, we could easily overfish our cutthroat stocks."

Unfortunately, the branch hatcheries lack the capability for extensive cutthroat propagation.

★ ★ ★

"But it's planned for the future," Reid explained, saying a new hatchery in Abbotsford is slated for completion in 1976.

In conjunction with this three-year study, the branch is planning to zone some specific lakes on the south end of the Island.

"Some we will be strictly stocking, some will undergo habitat improvement and stocking and others will be maintained for natural spawning," said Reid.

"Where we're going to stock heavily, we're planning to provide trails, parking and boat ramps," he continued.

"Our next priority area has to be Campbell River . . . in fact, this region is fished heavier now than most of the lakes around Victoria."

Daryll Hebert, regional wildlife and habitat protection biologist, is also pleased with the student program.

Besides basic inventory work, which the branch had been sorely needing, the students studying deer usage of timber in areas due to be logged, finding out whether blow-downs are a real deterrent to leaving green strips for wildlife migration corridors (or along streams) and aiding many other specific studies.

A bonus of all this activity is the better attitude logging companies are showing toward the branch.

Logging outfits have helped the students tremendously, even to the extent of flying them from place to place.

"It's really made the logging companies sit up and take notice," said Hebert.

As well it should.

They couldn't help but notice that a large number of trained eyes are keeping watch on their activities.

Besides conducting studies, various student groups have been busy building trails, clearing debris from streams and lake shores, evaluating steelhead questionaires, compiling a color-coded map of all Island freshwater fishing waters, reading fish scales and studying teeth of deer bagged during the last hunting season.

NIBBLES: Juan de Fuca Strait has just been subjected to another two days of gillnet fishing in the area east of the sports fishing reserve boundary at Sheringham Point . . . Reports indicate substantial numbers of coho were taken . . . Guess I'll have to forget about fishing Cowichan Bay for awhile.

Canadian Wildlife Federation reports that the cougar population appears to be making a steady recovery in Quebec and the Maritimes . . . The large quantity of eastern farmland now reverting to bush and better management of deer populations could account for increasing numbers of an animal long thought to be nearly eliminated.

NFL Cuts: Yesterday's Stars Fade Away

By The Associated Press

Some agonizing hours of suspense are over. Some National Football League careers are over.

Tuesday's exodus from NFL training camps resembled the mass departure of tourists from their last weekend of summer vacation. With uncertain futures ahead, nearly 100 players left pro locker rooms perhaps for the last time.

No respect for the past was shown as coaches pared their rosters to the 47-player limit. One-time stars joined one-time scrubs in the classless society of the also-ran.

Unlike Monday's cuts, which eliminated a number of lesserknown names from future game rosters and programs, Tuesday marked the end for some who have known success.

Running back Leroy Kelly became the four most productive rusher in NFL history with Cleveland Browns. But the Browns put him on waivers early this summer and Kelly caught on with Oakland Raiders.

But even he couldn't cut fast enough to avoid the biggest tackle of all. Although the Raiders' policy is not to announce squad cuts, a list of 14 departures was compiled from men absent from Tuesday's practice.

Kelly's empty locker has silent evidence.

Green Bay Packers veteran centre Ken Bowman, the team's player representative and an outspoken voice in the players' association strike, was placed on the injured reserve list due to a back injury and won't see action this year.

The last of the original New Orleans Saints and another player rep, Guard Del Williams, retired.

Williams had been listed as the club's starting guard until an old friend, Jake Kupp, came out of retirement and took his job away.

Ten-year veteran quarterback Pete Beathard suffered a similar fate at Kansas City's camp, but immediately signed with the World Football League Portland Storm. Another quarterback and WFL signee, Randy Johnson, was cut by New York Giants, who then traded for Green Bay reserve signal caller Jim Del Gaizo.

The Packers then picked up quarterback Dean Carlson from Kansas City.

The Giants also dropped their player representative. Running back Charlie Evans was cut, along with backfielder Rocky Thompson. Of the 40 players on the roster when New York's season ended last year, 24 no longer are with the club and 18 rookies have new jobs.

New York Jets dropped safety Chris Farasopoulos, punter Julian Fagan, linebacker Bob Spicer and defensive tackle Joe Jackson. Eleven rookies made the Jets' opening roster.

San Francisco 49ers sent punt return specialist Cecil Turner to Philadelphia Eagles, Minnesota Vikings swapped veteran defensive back Charlie West to Detroit Lions for a draft choice, the Chiefs traded wide receiver Robert West to San Francisco for a draft choice and Dallas Cowboys acquired place kicker Mac Percival from Chicago Bears for future considerations.

Miami Dolphins waived wide receiver Ron Sellers and Dave Rather, another pass catcher, was recalled from waivers and traded to Chicago for a future draft choice.

DON JONAS
. . . "could be fun"

JERRY WILLIAMS
. . . "my kind of coach"

Jonas Finds Happiness In Hamilton

HAMILTON (CP) — Don Jonas complained last week that Winnipeg Blue Bombers should have been good enough to at least let him play out his last Canadian Football League season in Winnipeg instead of trading him to Hamilton Tiger-Cats.

But after only a week in Hamilton, Jonas has changed his mind about retiring.

"This trade has given me a couple of extra years on my playing career," Jonas said in an interview.

The 36-year-old quarterback, traded for Ticat quarterback Chuck Ealey after Jonas began feuding with Bombers management, has found Ticat coach Jerry Williams easy to get along with.

"If I had to be traded, this was the place for me to come," said Jonas.

"This is my kind of team and my kind of coach."

Jonas says he is impressed with Williams who is known as an offensive-minded coach who prefers a passing attack to the scrambling of a quarterback such as Ealey.

"That's why I think I can play for another two years. It could be fun again."

Jonas said he didn't know if he would be starting in tonight's game against Calgary Stampeders. Jonas sat out most of his first game with Ticats last Saturday against Ottawa Rough Riders while Bill Etter directed the club to its fourth win.

"It's tough to come in and pick up a brand new system in a week," said Jonas.

"I know a lot of things I would like to do but because of the terminology, it would be hard to do. It could even be embarrassing.

"Look at it from the ball players' situation. If I didn't execute properly they might say 'geez, what a helluva trade that was.' They might lose confidence in me."

Game time is 5 p.m. PDT and television coverage is scheduled for the full CTV network. The CBC national network will televise Thursday night's encounter between British Columbia Lions and the Argonauts in Toronto, also set for 5 p.m. PDT.

HINTING he has been offered job as head coach of Toronto Argos, former Ottawa Rough Rider quarterback Russ Jackson said today any announcement "would come from other people." Jackson is a high school principal in Ottawa. Argos fired coach John Rauch last week.

RIDERS SHOP FOR LINEMEN

OTTAWA (CP) — Ottawa Rough Riders are looking for some new linemen either in Canada or through National Football League cuts made Tuesday night.

Head coach George Brancato said Tuesday he hoped to have at least one new lineman in action Saturday when they play Calgary Stampeders here in a Canadian Football League game and general-manager Frank Clair said three Ottawa linemen had been put on recall waivers to test the league tradewinds.

Neither would discuss the players by name, although Brancato acknowledged that defensive tackle Carl Taylor, dropped from the roster last week, was back on a five-day trial and that Charlie Brandon would be moving to offensive tackle from defence for Saturday's game.

"We might just have a new defensive tackle or there's always Taylor," Brancato said. "An offensive lineman couldn't get ready in time (for Saturday).

Clair said he had talked with two Chicago Bears players Monday and one from St. Louis Cardinals, but again he would not give names.

Electronically Timed Marks Will Be Listed Separately

ROME (Reuter) — World records for all track events up to 400 metres will be maintained in separate lists for hand-timed and fully-automatic timings for the next two years, the International Amateur Athletic Federation (IAFF) congress has decided.

The congress ratified the position taken by the IAAF council in Edinburgh last September, and was advised that a special subcommittee will study the problem of timings and report to the 1976 congress in Montreal.

Difficulties have arisen in recent seasons over discrepancies between hand and electronic timings.

The congress agreed that fully-automatic timing is desirable at all meetings though it was appreciated that many countries are unable to afford such costly equipment.

Though no automatically-timed world records have been published since the Edinburgh meeting, IAAF Secretary Federick Holder told delegates that a provisional list has been compiled.

The electronic world records are to be listed to 100ths of a second, though hand-timed performances will still be restricted to 10ths.

Athletes will be able to break electronic world records by 100ths of a second.

Pan-Am Push On in Brazil

SAO PAULO, Brazil (AP) — Brazil is trying to squeeze five years into eight months in preparation for the 1975 Pan-American Games.

Santiago, Chile, originally was named host for the athletic competition, which is expected to attract 5,000 athletes from 33 countries. Last fall, however, the military junta which ousted Chilean President Salvador Allende also ousted the Pan-American Games.

Sao Paulo was given the nod, mainly because it was the host city in 1963 and had most of the facilities readily available.

Nearly $'1 illion will be spent to refurbish playing fields and arenas for the 19 sports that are to be contested. And the University of Sao Paulo, which has one registered cyclist among 25,000 students, will inherit a velodrome being constructed for the Games.

But refurbished athletic facilities is not the most important thing this rapidly growing industrial city of 6.7 million people will get from the Games.

"It's not a bad business," said a Pan '75 spokesan of the money and interest that is expected to be generated in the Brazilian city from April 25 to May 11, 1975.

"Anyway, our president did not want the Pan-American Games to perish. We felt they should continue, and Brazil should be the one to keep them going."

Games officials say they do not expect as many records to fall as during the 1971 Games at Cali, Colombia, where the higher altitude sent records tumbling in several events.

Although higher altitude is not a factor here, officials know there will be plenty of other things to complain about in Sao Paulo.

Records indicate the inland city, ringed by slums and industrial parks, is among the world leaders in crime rate, and meningitis has been on the rise, with a daily average death toll of 14 persons.

But visitors to the Games also will encounter a modern-looking city, sheathed in steel and glass and served by a new subway system, and the 1975 Pan-American Games will provide an additional side to this already multifacted Brazilian city.

Vikings Top Gorge

University of Victoria Vikings squeezed through in overtime Tuesday to blank Gorge 2-0 at Royal Athletic Club and advance to the McGavin Cup competition in the premier division of the Vancouver Island Soccer League.

Vic Escude broke the scoreless deadlock after seven minutes of overtime and Tim Page hammered in the insurance tally two minutes later.

The other sudden-death semi-final, between Cosmo Royals and Victoria West, is scheduled for Sept. 17. Vikings meet the winner of that match in the final Sept. 24.

Burnaby Beaten Again

NEW WESTMINSTER, B.C. (CP) — Burnaby Cables went into Tuesday's Canadian junior lacrosse championship game with a different plan than the one they used in the best-of-seven series opener Sunday. The plan worked but the team lost, again.

The Cables tried to outrun and outscore Peterborough PCOs Sunday and dropped the first game of the Minto Cup series 14-11. Burnaby tried checking Tuesday and lost 12-9.

"We planned to lay back and check and I think it worked," Cables coach Dan Mattison said. "We hit people instead of dusting their uniforms off."

Despite the hitting, the powerful Ontario champions now are only two games away from an undefeated season after more than 40 exhibition, league and playoff games.

Steve Plunkett scored four goals for Peterborough Sunday but was kept off the scoreboard by Burnaby checkers Tuesday. So the PCOs spread their scoring around.

Guy Legault and Randy Bryan had two goals each to pace Peterborough while Jim Johnston, Ken Byers, Paul Evans and Moe Jodoin added singles.

Mike Holden, Ray Durante and Dave Matheson scored twice each for Burnaby while John Krgovich, Steve Shipley and Dan Perreault had one each.

"We couldn't have tried any harder," Mattison said. "We had some mental lapses and they took advantage. They are an awfully good team."

One lapse came in the third period. With the Cables two goals down, Burnaby captain Mike McLenaghen called for a measurement of Peterborough goaltender Tim Barrie's stick. The stick was found to be legal and Burnaby was assessed a minor penalty for requesting the measurement.

Cables were a man short at the time and PCOs scored two more goals to hold a 10-6 margin before Burnaby got back to full strength.

Had the measurement been sought prior to the start of the third period no penalty would have been assessed to the complaining team regardless of the outcome of the measurement.

A crowd of 2,127 watched Peterborough score four goals in less than two minutes midway through the second period to gain the lead they never relinquished.

PCOs, national champions in 1972 and 1973, resume their quest for a third straight Minto Cup title when the series resumes Thursday.

'Big Four' Inducted

PINEHURST, N.C. (AP) — Four of the first 13 members of golf's Hall of Fame—Jack Nicklaus, Arnold Palmer, Gary Player and Sam Snead—will be in the field for the richest tournament on the PGA tour, the $300,000 World Open.

The players inducted today into the new hall will be on hand when the 72-hole chase for a $60,000 first prize starts Thursday.

Nicklaus, Player and Lee Trevino, PGA and World Series of Golf champion, rank as the men to beat.

Nicklaus is fresh from his victory in the Tournament Players Division championship in Atlanta.

Player, the South African won the Masters and British Open titles this season, took Trevino to seven holes of sudden-death before bowing Monday in the World Series at Akron, Ohio.

Other top names include Hale Irwin, Tom Weiskopf, Hubert Green, Johnny Miller and Miller Barber, who took this event last season when it offered $100,000 to the winner.

Also named to the golf hall were Ben Hogan, Byron Nelson, Gene Sarazen, Patty Berg, Bobby Jones, Walter Hagen, Harry Vardon, Francis Ouimet and Babe Didrikson Zaharias.

All were selected by the Golf Writers' Association of America.

Blazers Acquire McLeod

VANCOUVER (CP) — Don McLeod will be playing goal for the Vancouver Blazers of the World Hockey Association this season.

The league's leading goaltender last year while playing for the Houston Aeros reportedly has agreed to a long-term contract with the Blazers.

The agreement calls for around $100,000 a year, the amount McLeod had asked for from the Aeros.

"I'll definitely be playing in Vancouver this year," said McLeod.

McLeod, now in the training camp of Team Canada in Saskatoon, led the Aeros to the WHA championship, playing 2,971 minutes, giving up 127 goals with three shutouts for a 2.56 goals against average.

Leeds' Late Goal Averts Cup Upset

LONDON (Reuter) — English League champions Leeds United, struggling to find form this soccer season, forced a replay of their Football League Cup second-round match against third-division Huddersfield Town through a last-minute goal Tuesday night.

Alan Gowling put Huddersfield ahead in the 78th minute, but Peter Lorimer evened for Leeds with the last seconds of the game running out.

Three hundred police were on duty for the match at Nottingham between Nottingham Forest and Newcastle United, whose F. A. Cup tie at Newcastle last season was marred by crowd riots.

There were only minor outbreaks of trouble, resulting in two arrests, as the match ended in a 1-1 draw.

A hat-trick by Colin Bell helped Manchester City sink Scunthorpe United, 6-0, in the biggest win of the night.

Former England international Bobby Charlton scored the 201st goal of his career for Preston North End in a 2-0 win over Sunderland.

BIONDA SUSPENDED AFTER ACCOSTING REF

TORONTO (CP) — G. T. Spence Lyons, president of the National Lacrosse League, Tuesday suspended Philadelphia Wings' general manager Jack Bionda and Ken S. Wood, Wings' director of player personnel, for the balance of the NLL playoffs.

The league also fined Bionda $1,000. The two members of the Wings' management were involved in an altercation with NLL referee Bill Dicks following Philadelphia's 15-12 loss to Maryland Stingers Monday night.

Rochester Takes Series' Command

MONTREAL (CP) — Al Gordaneer and Dave Wilfong each scored three times to lead Rochester Griffins to an 18-12 win over Montreal Quebecois Tuesday night, giving Rochester a 3-1 lead in their National Lacrosse League best-of-seven semi-final.

Kevin Parsons, Brian Wilson, Bill Foote and Tom Phair had two goals each for the Griffins.

John Davis and Jim Lynch each had three goals for Montreal, with Bill Sheehan, Dale MacKenzie, Serge Loiselle, Dave Tasker, Dave Litzenberger and Rob McCarthy getting the others.

The series resumes Thursday in Rochester with a sixth game, if necessary, here Saturday night.

Kiniski, Mr. X Come to Grips

Gene Kiniski will tangle with Mr. X, holder of the Pacific Coast championship, in the feature bout of a professional wrestling card Thursday at Memorial Arena.

Spear-Throwers Greet Ali

Ali tells how he'll beat Foreman

KINSHASA, Zaire, (AP) — Muhammad Ali arrived in Zaire from Paris Tuesday, saying he would be the home-town favorite, and George Foreman "the stranger" in their Sept. 25 (Zaire time) title fight in the heart of Africa.

A crowd of more than 1,000, including barefoot spear-throwers, ceremonial drummers, and a rock band screeching Welcome Ali, gathered at N'Djili airport and made the former champion appear to know what he was talking about.

The crowds swept to the foot of his airplane and smashed in a glass door in the airport lounge trying to get close to Ali during a brief news conference.

"I feel I am at home here," Ali said. "I feel that George Foreman is the stranger, the man who is coming into our home."

Ali looked drawn and slightly unnerved by the enthusiasm of the welcome.

Ali seems to have wide backing among the Zairois. When he asked a group of local reporters how many fans Foreman had among the country's population of 22 million, the reply was giggles and embarrassed silence.

"I'm in the best condition of my whole life," Ali said. "I can see no problems for me in this fight."

He said he hoped to meet as many Zairois as possible "in order that the black brothers and sisters in the United States see how I am accepted here."

Ali again stated that he would retire after the fight.

"I'll go out still on top."

Ali, who was accompanied by his wife and an entourage of 35 aides, later travelled from the airport to his training camp at N'Sele, about 10 miles away.

North Koreans Refuse To Return Gold Medals

TEHRAN (AP) — Host Iran captured eight of the 10 gold medals in Greco-Roman wrestling at the Asian Games Tuesday night and was awarded four golds in weightlifting after athletes from Japan and North Korea were disqualified when random doping tests proved positive.

The North Koreans, however, angrily refused to return the three gold medals presented to Kim Joong-il, a heavyweight. They were involved in another squabble in which games officials threatened action against some of the 60 to 70 North Koreans who staged a noisy protest over a boxing decision Monday night.

The other two gold medals in the 10 weight classes of Greco-Roman wrestling went to Japan.

In track, Japan's Shigenobu Murofushi won the men's hammerthrow, South Korea's Baik Ok-ja defended her Asian Games shot put championship with a record toss and China's Hsiao Chen-ping broke the women's long jump record.

After Japan's Makoto Ishikawa won the epee individual championship in fencing, the day's last event, Japan led the gold medal standing with 53, followed by China and Iran with 21 each, North Korea with 13 and South Korea with 10.

The other weightlifter disqualified after the prohibited drug Ephedrine was found in doping tests was Japanese middle heavyweight Masashi Ohuchi, who had won two gold medals and one silver. One of his golds went to Iran and one to China.

All three of Kim's gold medals were to go to Iran.

There was no boxing Tuesday night after a melee Monday night that stemmed from a verdict favoring Iran's Ansari Abdolreza over North Korea's Kim Wou-gil. The uprising forced suspension of nine other bouts.

Dr. Hassain Rassouli, secretary general of the Games organizing committee, said punitive action against the North Koreans was being considered.

COLLEGIATE ALL-STARS TOP SOVIETS

LANDOVER, Md. (AP) — David Thompson tossed in 30 points Tuesday night, leading the United States College all-star team to an 88-72 victory over the Soviet Union national team in the final game of their six-game basketball series.

Thompson, from North Carolina State, led a second-half rally to overcome a 42-41 Russian lead, hitting on six of 10 attempts from the field and five free throws.

The U.S. squad won five of the six games played during the 10-day Russian tour of the United States.

Summerside now has two wins and Esquimalt has absorbed two losses in the double round-robin competition which ends Friday.

Here's How Ties Will Be Settled

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Pittsburgh and Los Angeles would be sites of baseball play-off games in case of ties for division titled, said National League president Charles Feeney after coin tosses Tuesday.

Any ties for first place would be settled Oct. 3, the day after the regular season ends. The league's best-of-five playoff will begin Oct. 5 at the home of the Eastern Division champion.

Pittsburh Pirates lead St. Louis Cardinals in the East, and Los Angeles Dodgers are ahead of Cincinnati Reds in the West.,

Philadelphia Phillies, third in the East, allso took part in Tuesday's coin flipping. If they tie St. Louis for first place, the one-game dividion playoff would be in Philadelphia.

Feeney announced that the ticket price scale for the championship playoffs will remain the same, with a top of $7 a seat.

The first two games will be played in the Eastern city at 10 a.m. PDT, the remaining games in the West starting at 12:30 p.m. PDT. If Los Angeles is involved, Oct. 7 will be a travel day, but if the Dodgers don't participate, there will be no break in the playoff schedule.

Connors, Laver Setting Up Duel

FOREST HILLS, N.Y. (AP) — Jimmy Connors, the new U.S. Open tennis champion, and Australian Rod Laver, one of the game's all-time greats, may meet in a challenge match at New York's Madison Square Garden next month.

After Connors had crushed Ken Rosewall of Australia 6-1, 6-0, 6-1 in the men's final Monday, he told his business manager, Bill Riordon: "I have never played Rod Laver. Get him for me."

Riordon said Connors was upset over a statement by Laver in a national magazine which referred to Connors as a "cheese champion."

"We have called the Laver people and they are willing to go through with the match. It's just a matter of working out the details," Riordon said.

Laver, the only player besides Don Budge to win tennis' Grand Slam — the Australian, French and U.S. Opens and Wimbledon — did not play in the U.S. Open this year.

True to Word, Brock Does It For Home Fans

By The Associated Press

Lou Brock has made good on his promise to the baseball fans of St. Louis.

Brock, who had said he wanted to break Maury Wills' stolen-base record before the home fans at Busch Stadium, did just that Tuesday night, stealing second base in the first and seventh innings to increase his season total to 105—one more than the standard set by Wills in 1962.

"I'm glad to get it over with, although I'd have liked it to be during a winning game," said Brock, whose Cardinals were beaten 8-2 by Philadelhia Phillies.

Elsewhere in the National League, Pittsburgh Pirates beat Chicago Cubs 12-4, Los Angeles Dodgers blanked Atlanta Braves 1-0, Cincinnati Reds beat San Diego Padres 5-2, Montreal Expos defeated New York Mets 6-4, and San Francisco Giants edged Houston Astros 6-5 in 11 innings.

Wills said he had mixed emotions about seeing his record broken, but hailed Brock's outstanding performance.

"My hat's off to him," the former Los Angeles Dodgers' infielder said. "I never thought anyone would approach the record this soon, probably not in my lifetime."

The theffs came during the Cards' 142nd game and Brock's 134th. Wills stole his 104th base in the Dodgers' 165th game of the 1962 season.

Brock remained at first base for only one pitch before each steal.

After leading off the first inning with a single, he broke for second on the second pitch by Philadelphia right-hander Dick Ruthven and easily beat the throw from catcher Bob Boone, which bounced into centre field as Brock went to third.

In the seventh inning, Brock again waited until Ruthven had an 0-1 count on Ron Hunt before streaking to second, once again well ahead of Boone's wide throw to the bag.

Brock tried to steal once again in the ninth inning, after reaching base on a throwing error by Phils' shortstop Larry Bowa. He broke for second on a 1-1 pitch, but this time he was thrown out by Boone.

The steals by Brock, who has been thrown out 29 times this year, also lifted him to 740 for his career. Only Ty Cobb, who had 892, and Eddie Collins, 743, stole more bases during their major league careers.

Brock's base-running efforts overshadowed the slugging of Phils' third baseman Mike Schmidt, who hit a two-run homer and two doubles and drove in four runs. He now leads the majors with 35 homers and is tops in the NL with 110 RBI.

The Phils' victory dropped St. Louis 3½ games behind front running Pittsburgh in the NL East.

Don Sutton of Los Angeles blanked Atlanta on four hits to raise his record to 15-9 and Ron Cey drove in the game's only run with a single in the second inning.

Willie Davis hit a two-run homer and Larry Lintz drove in three runs with two singles to pace the Montreal attack as the Expos beat the Mets.

Don Gullett scattered six hits and fanned 11 batters in pitching the Reds to victory over San Diego. The win kept Cincinnati 3½ games behind the Dodgers in the NL West.

Ken Brett, making his first start since injuring his elbow Aug. 6, pitched the first six innings of the Pirates' win over Chicago, and also rapped out three hits.

Richie Hebner contributed four hits to Pittsburgh's 20-hit barrage.

Second-Time Lucky For a New Yankee

By The Associated Press

Alex Johnson, acquired Monday from Texas Rangers, went to work on Tuesday night in a New York Yankee uniform and hit a game-winning home run.

"You have to get lucky sometime," said Johnson after his 420-foot hit in the 12th inning brought the Yankees a 2-1 victory over Boston Red Sox.

Ironically, Johnson failed earlier in a potential game-winning situation when he struck out as a pinch-hitter with a man in scoring position.

The win gave the Yankees a two-game lead over both the Red Sox and Baltimore Orioles in the hot American League East race.

"This helped a man (pitcher Pat Dobson) win a game," said Johnson, a well-travelled veteran. "There's still a long way to go."

The Orioles lost a 6-5, 10-inning decision to Milwaukee Brewers to fall into a second-place tie with the Red Sox.

In Tuesday night's other American League games, Cleveland Indians beat Detroit Tigers 12-6, Minnesota Twins beat Chicago White Sox 8-7 in 15 innings and California Angels defeated Kansas City Royals 8-2.

Johnson's game-winner, his fifth homer of the baseball season, came off reliever Diego Segui, 7-7. The victory went to Dobson, 16-14, who won his sixth straight game with last-inning relief help from Sparky Lyle. Dobson gave up four hits in 11 innings.

The Yankees tied the game 1-1 in the ninth inning on a walk to Lou Piniella and a controversial double by Chris Chambliss.

After Piniella walked, Chambliss doubled, scoring pinch-runner Larry Murray. Chambliss pulled up at third.

But a fan in the right field stands touched the ball and the Red Sox argued that the runners should go back to second and third because it was a ground-rule double. The umpires concurred, bringing New York manager Bill Virdon storming out to protest the decision.

After several minutes, Virdon won his argument that the runner would have scored.

Sixto Lezcano singled home a run in the 10th inning to give Milwaukee its victory over Baltimore.

Johnny Briggs walked to open the Milwaukee 10th and moved to second on a bunt sacrifice by Bob Coluccio. Lezcano then singled to right to score Briggs with the game-winner.

Cleveland reached Detroit's Mickey Lolich for five runs on six straight singles in the second inning and went on to beat the Tigers.

Lolich, who had won his four previous decisions against Cleveland this season, retired the leadoff batter in the second inning before Buddy Bell, Joe Lis, Frank Duffy, Angel Hermoso, John Jeter and Oscar Gamble singled. That put Cleveland in front 6-2 and chased Lolich.

Joe Lahoud drove in five runs to lead California over Kansas City.

Calgary Boy Takes Title

OTTAWA (CP) — With a day of competition still to go, three champions were declared Tuesday in the national youth five-pin bowling championships.

In each case, their leads are so great that they cannot be caught in the one day of play remaining.

Ed Nordvall of Calgary wrapped up the senior boys' singles event by building up a record of 18 wins and three losses while Prince Albert, Sask., went out in front of the bantam girl's team event 14-4. Also out of reach of their nearest competitors was the Sudbury team in the junior boys' event with a 14-1 record.

Almost 300 entrants were taking part in the competitions.

Christine Danis of Gatineau, Que., remained first in the bantam girl's singles at 15-6, Leonard Leveille of Earlton, Ont., took over first place in the junior boy's singles with a 18-6 record and Regina eased out Surrey, B.C., to lead the senior boys's team event with a 13-5 record.

On other action, Sudbury took over first place in the bantam boys' team competition at 12-3, while Paul Sawyer of Vancouver jumped in front in the singles event at 16-5.

Cathy Harms of Surrey maintained her lead in the junior girl's singles with a 18-6 record and Prince Albert stayed in the lead in the team event at 13-5.

In senior girl's competition, Val Yasinski of New Westminster, B.C., broke out of a first place tie to take the sole lead at 15-6, while Vernon, B.C., went out front in the team event with a 11-4 record.

The championships are scheduled to end today.

France Abolishes Police Cards

PARIS (Reuter) — An old French hotel rule that irritated travellers, embarrassed illicit lovers and often misled detectives is being abolished by President Valery Giscard d'Estaing's government.

From mid-September Frenchmen no longer will have to fill in those tell-tale police registration cards that have irked hotel guests in France for 100 years.

Foreign tourists must still fill in the cards but the government is studying a different registration system for them, too.

"These measure will allow people to travel in France without being tracked by police," says Interior Minister Michel Poniatowski.

Abolition of the cards relieves one of this country's worst bureaucractic headaches. Nearly 15 million cards were filled out last year, submerging hoteliers and police in thousands of hours extra work.

Each day, hotels had to take the forms containing names, addresses, professions, sex, identity card numbers and signatures of all new guests to the local police station. There the cards were sorted and sent to regional headquarters for filing.

Often the forms were found useless or misleading by the police.

Hotel clerks seldom check details written on the cards, and irreverent Frenchmen sometimes taunt police by filling in such things as name: Bluebeard profession: mass murderer.

Under sex, they might put "insatiable."

Poniatowski acknowledged that criminals invariable entered false names.

So police are mostly unconcerned at the abolition of a system that has been a routine part of their work since the 1870s.

"The change is no great drama for us," a police spokesman said. "Any interesting information was always drowned in the flood."

He said the cards rarely led to the arrest of a criminal, though they were often useful in checking alibis.

Hotelkeepers are rejoicing.

They say the cards caused some two hours of work a day at a moderate-sized hotel, apart from detaining guests.

The measure may also please unmarried couples. Because of the cards, lodging together in France has often been a strain for those trying to keep up conventional appearances.

But Claude Lemercier, director of the exclusive Crillon Hotel in Paris, does not think the measure will fill hotels with "irregular" couples.

"After all, discretion has always been our business," he says.

One-Firm Community Bucks Trends

ST. VICTOR, Sask. (CP) — With cheerful insouciance, the 102 residents of St. Victor ignore every economic, social, cultural and demographic trend in Saskatchewan.

But then, any hamlet housing an insurance company with $10 million in assets can be expected to be somewhat unusual.

With all but four families employed by the Family Life Assurance Co., St. Victor has been protected from the fate that would otherwise have awaited a community with no railway, no industry and 10 miles of gravel between it and the nearest paved road.

While almost all other small communities in the province have been losing population and businesses, St. Victor has been growing steadily.

Where French-speaking families in other communities are faced with assimilation, in St. Victor the French language and culture thrives, recently boosted by construction of a cultural centre whose list of activities reads as if it were in a city.

Elsewhere, organized labor may be making gains, but here benevolent paternalism reigns.

And when Mayor Roger Legault refers to the occasional problem of a young person smoking, he's talking about tobacco, not marijuana.

The anomaly of St. Victor would not have been possible without the salesmanship of J. D. Lalonde, who laid the foundation for Family Life by successfully operating a casual form of insurance starting in the 1920s.

"The plan was actuarily unsound, said Roger Lalonde, who took over as company president after his father's retirement. "Old J. D. was fully aware of that long before the government was."

Members paid $15 to enrol in the plan and contributed $1 every time a club member died. 'J. D.' never missed a payment in 30 years before forming Family Life in 1954 with an investment of $30,000.

Policies Sell in Quebec

Today, the company has issued about $100 million worth of insurance — 72 per cent in Saskatchewan, almost 20 per cent in Quebec and smaller amounts in British Columbia, Alberta and Manitoba.

New business is heavily concentrated in Quebec — 48 per cent of policies issued this year. All company documents are kept in both French and English.

Roger Lalonde maintains that the company's location — 130 miles by road southeast from Regina — has both advantages and disadvantages.

All travelling begins with the road trip, but that reduces travel. Mechanics to service office equipment cannot be readily called in, but company employees have developed the ability to maintain and repair it themselves.

Although all company operations are supervised from St. Victor — the "home office" — Lalonde said the legal head office is Calgary, "just for prestige, you might say, especially when recruiting new agents or policy holders."

The dominant presence of Family Life in St. Victor is unmistakeable. The only cafeteria is in the basement of the two-storey brick building, the general store is owned by the employees' association, the postmaster is Lalonde, a weekly French newspaper is in the company building, and accounting and other services provided to businesses in other communities are performed by the company.

It has 34 employees here, three part-time, and will add one or two a year as it expands.

The only independent business in town is an auto body shop supporting two families.

Only Allowed to Lead

Lalonde concedes that some people think he has too much influence, but argues "you can only lead so long as the followers allow you to lead."

St. Victor residents are given every opportunity to show leadership in community events, he said.

"We encourage our employees to get involved in local activities, otherwise there wouldn't be any."

Mayor Legault — Family Life's data processing manager — said bluntly that without the company there would be "nothing, absolutely nothing" in the town.

There had been disagreements between the council "but we've managed to solve them without too much fuss."

The benefits of the company are readily apparent in a community where the houses are worthy of a modern city subdivision.

Unique Building Record Took 25 Years

By CAROL KENNEDY

LONDON (CP) — In 1949 a German-born scholar named Nikolaus Pevsner worked out that it would take the royal commission on historic monuments at least 375 years to complete its inventory of notable English buildings. He decided to show that the job could be done by one dedicated man in just under 25 years.

Right on cue, Sir Nikolaus Pevsner, as he now is, has published the last of his monumental Buildings of England series — 46 volumes covering every English county, with two for London, totalling 20,000 pages and 8.5 million words.

Now aged 72, he has written 35 of those volumes entirely himself, travelling 80,000 miles in a battered car driven by his wife until her death two years ago.

The job meant a seven-day, 90-hour working week personally examining hundreds of churches, inns, manor-houses, castles and 20th-century office blocks, and writing up fat notebooks at the end of the day in a modest hotel room.

ACHIEVEMENT UNIQUE

It is, says critic and historian A. J. P. Taylor, "a tremendous achievement, comparable to climbing Everest or running the four-minute mile. . . . No one is ever likely to attempt this task single-handed again."

Without Pevsner, says Taylor, "we were men half-blind, only vaguely aware of the rich legacy that our forefathers left us." The neat blue volumes have established such a reputation that the question "Is it in Pevsner?" has become virtually a yardstick of architectural merit.

Pevsner, a refugee from Hitler's Germany, got the idea from the German Dehio series, established before the Second World War by an architectural historian who bicycled round the main cities taking notes.

It has been said that perhaps only someone with Teutonic gifts of thoroughness, industry and orderliness could attempt a job of such magnitude, but Pevsner's scholarship is worn lightly and spiced with highly personal reactions to the monuments he describes.

OPINIONS PUNGENT

Of Shakespeare's bust in the parish church at Stratford-upon-Avon, he says the sculptor, Gerard Johnson, "succeeded in making the hard look a self-satisfied schoolmaster."

"Small Perp. of no interest" was his concise comment on one church in the Perpendicular style.

Although he hates the "brutalism" of such modern buildings as London's concrete Hayward Gallery, he can defend some contemporary designs in spiritel fashion. Describing the modern St. Catherine's College, Oxford, as "a perfect piece of architecture," he says if young people don't like it, "that may be an argument against them rather than against the college."

His method of work was, first, to have research assistants extract all available information about a county from printed sources. This often made a pile of paper a yard high. Next, he would take an ordnance map with a scale of one mile to the inch and for each square of the map, make a list of buildings and monuments to be visited.

KEPT COPIOUS NOTES

He made it a rule never to look at the research material until he had jotted down his own impressions, using the printed sources only to verify facts. Fieldwork would end each day around 6 p.m., and then would come long hours of writing up his notes.

"You had to do it while the memory was fresh," he explained, "because the next day it was overlaid by more details and was dead."

He aimed to do two counties a year, as well as lecturing at three universities, participating in numerous committees, editing a history of art and turning out a half-dozen other books.

Ironically, neither he nor Penguin Books, the publishers, has made a profit out of the venture, though the books are steady sellers. Pevsner chose to take an editorial salary rather than royalties, and Penguin says it was always a costly and not a profit-making enterprise.

Allen Lane, Penguin's founder, once introduced Pevsner at a banquet as "my best losing author."

Even at 72, Pevsner's appetite for work is undimmed. He has just published a huge history of building styles through the ages and is embarking on four further series of guides chronicling notable buildings of Scotland, Ireland, Wales and the United States. This time he will not be doing the foot-slogging himself, but has personally selected the writers and researchers for the job.

As for his vast one-man achievement, he doubted that the books would be superseeded for a while.

"They'll need somebody else who is totally nuts to do it again," he said.

There's another limit you should know: Your own.

Everybody knows that it's best not to drink before driving. But everybody also knows that most people drink, and some occasionally drive afterwards.

So, many safety officials now say: "If you do drink before driving, know your own limit as well as the speed limit."

Records show that the biggest problem on the highway is not the moderate social drinker, but the problem drinker. Because most of us, fortunately, stay within our limits.

If you choose to drink, drink responsibly.

Mowat Changes Mind on Eskimos

SONDRE STROMFIORD, Greenland (CP) — Canadian author Farley Mowat says he was wrong when in books he wrote in the 1950s he called on the federal government to get involved in the north.

Mowat, 53, said in an interview he was wrong to call on the government to move in and save starving Eskimos and his revised conclusions will be written into new editions of People Of The Deer and The Desperate People this fall.

"As you get older you continually change your mind about things," Mowat said.

"I was so upset about the physical conditions of the Eskimos in 1945 that I thought the only way they could survive would be to bring in the government on a massive scale.

"In the old empire of the north (the church, the RCMP and the Hudson's Bay Co.) the idea was to keep the Eskimo as he was. They really thought he was incapable of being a modern man. The best thing was to keep him slightly domesticated but definitely inferior.

"The old empire said the Eskimos are like children. This implies, of course, that the whites were adults and this was the attitude of the Hudson's Bay Co., the RCMP and the Roman Catholic and Anglican missions.

"I took part in the campaign that got rid of the old empire and brought in the new empire of the government, I'm afraid to say."

"Well, not afraid to say. What the hell, I'm not ashamed . . .

"You were going to spoil them if you brought them into the new world, according to the old empire. But now there's a new morality designed to pressure the Eskimos into being like us. I supported them but I didn't understand.

"In trying to help the Eskimo I helped deliver them from one set of emperors to another.

"In the Desperate People I said we, the people of Canada, must give the Eskimo people equal opportunity. What I didn't realize is he doesn't want to be our equal. He wants to be himself. He wants to be an Eskimo to whatever physical limits he requires."

Mowat says part of the solution is for all non-Eskimos to get out of the Eskimo's land.

Questions Raised In MD's Appeal

OTTAWA (CP) — Three constitutional questions have been raised in the appeal of Dr. Henry Morgentaler against his conviction of performing an illegal abortion.

Although all 10 provincial attorneys-general were served notice of the questions, only the federal government will appear in the Supreme Court of Canada Oct. 2 to argue them.

The questions, the answers to which will form part of the Supreme Court written judgment, are:

1. Whether section 251 of the Criminal Code dealing with abortion is within the powers of Parliament to enact since regulation of hospitals are under the exclusive authority of provincial legislatures. The section imposes duties on hospitals before abortions can be performed.

2. Whether the same Criminal Code section is unconstitutional since a person who performs an abortion is presumed guilty of an offence unless he can prove otherwise.

3. Whether the section infringes on individual rights of women which are protected by the Canadian Bill of rights.

COULD REVERSE

If the court answers any of the three questions in the affirmative, it is conceivable that the conviction of Dr. Morgentaler could be wiped out.

All three questions were raised prior to the start of Dr. Morgentaler's trial in Montreal before Mr. Justice James Hugessen and were dismissed prior to the hearing by the judge and jury.

In addition to the constitutional points raised, Dr. Morgentaler's lawyers also will argue that the abortion claimed as illegal, and for which he was tried, actually was necessary and that it met all the conditions imposed by Parliament to make it legal.

Dr. Morgentaler originally was found not guilty of performing an illegal abortion mainly on the defence based on section 45 of the Criminal Code.

Aerosol Spray Buildup Could Be Deadly—Chemist

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (UPI) — The earth's radiation screen may be damaged within a few decades by millions of pounds of gases escaping into the environment each year from aerosol cans and refrigeration units, a chemist warned Tuesday.

There may be an eventual effect on human health, said Dr. F. S. Rowland, professor of chemistry at the University of California at Irvine, who addressed a meeting of the American Chemical Society.

He said the problem involves gases known as fluorocarbons, which are used as propellants in aerosol products such as hair sprays and deodorants and as refrigerants. The gases are manufactured under various trade names.

The flurocarbons themselves are harmless to man.

But Rowland said so much is escaping into the atmosphere that soon the gas molecules will rise to the stratosphere, where sunlight will break them down into fragments. One of the products will be chlorine atoms.

Rowland said the chlorine atoms will react with the ozone; one chlorine atom being able to destroy hundreds of thousands of ozone molecules.

"The amount of fluorocarbon that is now being used is sufficiently large if continued that the steady amount will have an appreciable effect on the ozone layer," he said in an interview.

"The consequences of having an appreciable reduction in the ozone layer will be the increased ultraviolet radiation reaching the earth with certain biological effects and some uncertain biological effects."

He said the effects may include wider incidences of skin cancer.

"Our present best estimates for the time to maximum effect at the present rate of usage is 50 to 80 years, with appreciable effects long before that," he said.

N-BOMBS PREY?

WASHINGTON (AP) — American nuclear bombs stored overseas might fall easy prey to attacks by terrorist groups and might be held hostage if revolts caused changes in the host governments, the U.S. Congress was told Tuesday.

Admiral Gene LaRocque, retired from the U.S. Navy, also said the overkill capacity of the Soviet Union and the U.S. has so increased that the combined raw megatonnage of both countries is equal to 1.2 million bombs of the type that destroyed Hiroshima, Japan, in the Second World War.

LaRocque, a former navy fleet commander and strategic planner who now heads the Centre for Defence Information, urged that bombs now stored overseas be brought home.

Nuclear Threats Studied

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Congress is investigating the extent to which even a limited nuclear war between the U.S. and Soviet Union could have dire results for all mankind.

The explosion of a large number of nuclear warheads might destroy the ozone layer in the earth's atmosphere, director Fred Ikle of the arms control and disarmament agency said recently.

That ozone layer helps protect all living beings from ultraviolet radiations.

Defense Secretary James R. Schlesinger was called before the arms control subcommittee of the senate foreign relations committee to answer questions today on the possible effects of a limited nuclear attack by the Soviet Union on the U.S.

Earlier this year, the defense secretary outlined an important change in U.S. nuclear strategy which included a shift away from massive retaliation in nuclear warfare to the possibility of various gradations of limited nuclear conflict.

But if limited nuclear warfare could be as devastating as disarmament director Ikle has suggested, then, congressional sources said Schlesinger's innovations in nuclear strategy may be very unwise.

Schlesinger's testimony came as the U.S. prepared for the resumption of the strategic arms talks with the Russians in Geneva Sept. 18.

But so far, President Ford has failed to resolve differences between Schlesinger and Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger on how to approach those talks.

White House officials, however, have said the differences can be resolved before the hard barginning begins.

Tito Arrests Pro-Soviets

Albania Purges Minister

BELGRADE (WP) — Albania's Defence Minister Gen. Begir Balluku was reported by Western diplomatic sources Tuesday to have been removed from his post in what was described as a purge of potential Pro-Soviet elements in the Albanian armed forces.

Balluku, 57, a graduate of the Soviet military academy, has been Albania's defense minister since 1954. He was also a member of the ruling politburo. Reports reaching here from Albania said Balluku may have been executed.

The defence minister has been conspicuously absent from several functions, including a Chinese military day reception.

Despite reports that the purge was prompted by Belluku's plotting to take power in Albania, diplomatic sources here suggested that his removal may reflect growing internal pressures for change in the avowedly Stalinst nation in the Balkans.

Albania has been ruled since 1945 by Enver Hoxha, the Albanian Communist chief, who has kept the nation in total isolation except for his cordial relations with faraway China. China's emergence into the world and a move toward East-West detente has only reinforced Hoxha's Stalinist position.

BELGRADE (WP) — Yugoslav authorities are reliably reported to have uncovered a clandestine Communist organization advocating Yugoslavia's return to the Soviet Bloc.

Reliable sources said that about 40 persons allegedly belonging to the organization have been arrested in Montenegro, one of Yugoslavia's six constituent republics. They said the leaders of the group are still at large.

This is the first time since President Tito broke away from the Soviet Union in 1948 that an illegal pro-Soviet organization was discovered in Yugoslavia. The discovery has caused considerable apprehension in government circles here and is reportedly seen by some senior officials as evidence of Moscow's "duplicity" and its covert effort to encourage anti-Tito elements in the country.

According to the sources, the pro-Soviet group has been in contact with East European diplomats in Belgrade and with officials of an exile Yugoslav Communist party, which is supported by Moscow. A number of anti-Tito exiles have been operating in recent years in Belgium.

Asked last week about the reported arrests of pro-Soviet Communists, Yugoslav officials said they had no knowledge about the matter. Monday, the answer was the same although on neither of the two occasions was the report explicitly denied.

Diplomatic sources here suggested that the current visit to Moscow of Edward Kardelj, the senior Yugoslav official after Tito, was connected with the Montenegro affair. Kardelj has been in the Soviet Union since Sept. 1.

The pro-Soviet group has organized itself as a new Yugoslav Communist party, according to the sources, and held its first "party congress" in the Adriatic city of Bar, in Montenegro, early this year. At that time a "central committee" was elected.

The Bar "congress" is said to have adopted a party platform which included an explicit denial of the legitimacy of the Tito government since 1948.

It is believed that only a relatively small number of persons were involved in the organization and that most of them were disgruntled orthadox Communists who opposed Tito's independent policies and his break with Stalin in 1948. The names of the organization's leaders were not known. The names of persons arrested indicate that none of the Montenegrin Communists were involved.

Although the Tito government enjoys wide popular support, the existence of a covert pro-Moscow organization (albeit insignificant in terms of numbers) is a source of grave concern here. It comes at a time of renewed speculations about Soviet objectives in the Balkans and possible Soviet involvement in Yugoslav internal affairs following the departure of the 82-year-old Tito from the political scene.

The new "party," according to the sources, was confined to Montenegro, whose people traditionally have been pro-Russian (during the 18th and 19th centuries Tsarist Russia was the only protector of the tiny mountain principality in the midst of the Turkish Ottoman empire).

More recently, pro-Russian enthusiasm of the Montenegrins was seen in 1941 when Montenegrin Communists proclaimed their region the 17th republic of the Soviet Union. The move was quickly reversed and hushed by Stalin who feared that it would weaken Moscow's position vis-a-vis Western allies at a time when the Soviet Union urgently needed Western assistance to halt Nazi invasion.

The Montenegro affair will undoubtedly have an impact on Soviet-Yugoslav relations, which have been described as "normal and friendly" in recent years. But the Yugoslav leadership appears determined not to play up the incident and thus possibly create new tensions between Moscow and Belgrade.

It is possible, according to some diplomats, that the Russians in fact did not provide any direct encouragement to the disgruntled orthodox Communists and that this small group had acted on its own.

Kardelj's current visit to Moscow, in this view, may be confined to seeking clarifications from Soviet officials.

Major Contract

WASHINGTON (Reuter) — The defence department on Tuesday awarded McDonnell Douglas Corp. a $225.8-million contract for F-4E fighters, most of which are believed destined for Greece and Turkey. The United States Air Force said 84 of the 108 supersonic Phantom fighters called for in the contract are for foreign military sales, with the rest scheduled for American units.

RUSSIA SENDS PLANES, ARMS TO EGYPT: PAPER

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP)—The newspaper Beirut says that the Soviet Union has supplied Egypt with 50 MiG-23 fighter-bombers, its most-advanced operational fighter plane.

A Cairo correspondent for the paper says official sources told him several Egyptian airports were closed for three hours Monday to receive the MiG-23s, and that "numerous Russian military transport planes also landed other modern arms and equipment."

The airlift, Beirut says, ended a Soviet ban on shipments of arms and military spare parts to Egypt imposed after the Arab-Israeli war last October.

The report by the Iraqi-backed paper was not carried by any other Arab newspaper, and there was no comment from Cairo.

In Amman, Jordanian Premier Zaid Rifai denied reports circulating in London that his government sold 100 of its British Hawker Hunter jets, 50 of its British Centurion tanks and a British missile system to South Africa. The British foreign office said Tuesday that it is investigating the reports, which also said South Africa sent the planes on to Rhodesia.

Britain bans shipments of all British war materials to both South Africa and Rhodesia because of their racial policies.

Meanwhile, Israel officially accused Syria of war crimes in its treatment of Israeli prisoners captured during the October war.

The Israelis sent documents to the United Nations General Assembly and Security Council, compiled from testimony by 65 returned PoWs.

Egyptian President Anwar Sadat indicated in a speech in Port Said he plans to reopen the Suez canal to world shipping even if Israel refused to pull its troops farther back in the Sinai Peninsula.

In Washington, United States intelligence estimates are that Soviet arms shipments have substantially improved the quality of Syria's military forces and more than made up the losses sufferd in the October war with Israel.

But the Soviet aid, including a new line of jet fighters, is not enough to tip the balance against the Jewish state, and Israel would triumph should fighting resume between the two countries, it is believed.

Showdown Stage Near In Japan-Korea Tiff

Times News Services

TOKYO — Japan and South Korea appear to be heading into the showdown stage of an emotional dispute arising from last month's assassination attempt on Korean President Park Chung Hee.

Meetings of high officials in both capitals Tuesday centred on the terms of an official message soon to be dispatched from Tokyo to Seoul in the hands of a special Japanese envoy.

The Korean government is demanding a strong apology for the fact the assassination attempt, by a lifelong Korean resident of Japan, was launched from Japanese soil. Seoul is also demanding a Japanese commitment to control the anti-Park activities of Korean residents of Japan.

Japanese and Koreans have a long, tangled and bitter history, making it easy for any controversy between them to become quickly inflamed. The present conflict, involving the death of Mrs. Park by an assassin's bullet intended for her husband, has led to anti-Japanese rioting in Seoul and strong emotions in both capitals.

Police fired volleys of tear gas at several hundred rock-throwing demonstrators for the third consecutive day today to break up an angry protest outside the Japanese embassy.

Police said two men carrying sticks of dynamite near the embassy were arrested. They said about 7,000 persons took part in anti-Japanese demonstrations in downtown Seoul and other parts of the country.

About 1,500 riot-armed police guarding the embassy drove the demonstrators back with tear gas. No injuries were reported.

Police said they picked up two men in their 40s near the embassy in possession of five dynamite sticks, nine wicks and 24 gasoline bombs. The two men were held for questioning, they said.

Japanese officials believe the Seoul demonstrations have been tolerated if not encouraged in an attempt to apply pressure on Japan. Some reports in the hands of Tokyo authorities suggest that peddlers and toughs were encouraged to attack the Japanese embassy and given explicit instructions on how far to go.

The Seoul government has been spreading the word informally that it may sever relations with Japan if its demands for apologies and actions are not adequately met. A Japanese diplomatic source Tuesday estimated the chances of break in relations at about 50-50. Seoul could show displeasure short of such a drastic move by recalling its ambassador from Tokyo or (at a different level) permitting the spread of anti-Japanese disorders.

Tokyo's most serious problem involves the demand that it crack down on the North Korean-oriented "General Association of Korean Residents on Japan" (the Chosoren) and to some extent on other anti-Park Korean exile groups. Japan is willing to bar espionage or other quasi-military activities, but has been unwilling to curb peaceful political activities among the Korean residents.

DEPRESSION STARTS FRIDAY

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — The new depression will begin at noon on Friday, the 13th. But with style.

A group of radio, television and recording artists will open a bread line. Bagels also will be available.

So will apples, but they will cost $1.00 each. The bread and bagels were donated, 13 dozen bagels and 13 loaves of bread.

The bread, said spokesman Les Carter, a Los Angeles disc jockey, came from a health food store.

"We want this bread line to be as healthy as possible," he said.

A ground-floor window will be available for jumpers. "We don't want anyone to get hurt," Carter said.

A band will play music and unemployed trumpeter Jeff Ehrhart will offer an original composition, "Brother, can you spare $1.75."

"The depression of the thirties got off to a bad start," Carter said. "It turned out to be a bummer for years. It was always described by our parents as 'something we went through and you'll never have to go through.'

"We want this depression to be a lot more pleasant, a lot more comfortable and have a lot more style," he said. "But we don't want to pass it on to our children."

REDRAWN NORDAL PLEASES

Redrawn plans for the $14 million Nordal Mall development are now being studied at City Hall, and the reaction of both officials and elected representatives appears to be enthusiastic.

"Call it gobbledygook if you like, but the whole thing hangs together in a far more cohesive architectural statement than it ever did before," said one senior official.

A planning department spokesman said the plans delivered Monday by Calgary architect Albert Dale show a "sensitivity," appreciation for detail and treatment of grade differentials that were lacking in previous concepts not prepared under a full architectural commission.

The revised scheme for the site bounded by Government, Courtney, Wharf and Broughton still has as its central feature a covered shopping mall linking Government and Wharf, but gives the two-level mall "a more open, airy feeling," the official said.

Care has also been taken to "break up" the long Broughton Street elevation with slight height differences, stepped-back surfaces and bay window effects, so as to avoid a "slabby" look.

As an example of detailing, the planners point out that a ramp has been included for access to the complex from Courtney, for the benefit of handicapped persons in wheelchairs.

A central court area under a skylight roof is the focus of both upper and lower malls, with a gallery provided around the upper level.

The third floor of the building, housing condominium suites and a separate office block, will partly enclose a recreational area that could be a rooftop tennis court.

Clouds Cut Vision In Canyon Crash

Low-lying clouds which blocked pilot visibility have been pegged as the contributing factor in Monday's plane crash that left the bodies of 11 passengers strewn around the rock bottom of a 200-foot canyon near Nanaimo.

Investigating officials speculated today that the twin-engine West Coast Air Services plane had dropped altitude to attain better visibility before the nash in a canyon adjacent to Mount Hooper.

"I couldn't believe my eyes when I saw a plane of that size coming down such a narrow valley," commented the only witness, Paul Pera of Duncan, a logger who had been working in the area Monday.

"It seemed to me the pilot realized it was a dead-end canyon and was trying to turn the plane out of it.

"I lost it for a second. It went out of sight. Then behind this kind of ridge, I suddenly saw a great big puff of smoke."

Officials think the plane struck the side of the canyon, then fell several hundred feet to the valley floor.

Pera said it was rainy and cloudy when the Grumman Goose crashed about 1 p.m.

Police are still withholding the name of the 11th victim, a Vancouver man, pending notification of next-of-kin.

Other victims in the crash have been identified as: pilot, Richard Ferguson, 33, of Richmond; passengers: Herbert Moore, 26, his wife, Margaret, 21, their two-year-old son, Herbert, all of Tahsis; Robert Richardson, 43, and Mrs. Lillian Dupont, 27, both of Tofino; Peter Yaremkewich, 43, of Kendrick Arm, near Tahsis; Bill Appleby, 51, of Vancouver; Mrs. Doreen Nagy, 30, of Ucluelet; Arnie Johnson, 22 of Prince Rupert.

Rescue officials at the scene were still attempting to hoist the bodies from the foot of the rocky canyon up perpendicular rock wall Tuesday and they were hampered by falling rocks.

"We'd no sooner get a stretcher on its way up and we would have to duck for cover," said Nanaimo RCMP Constable William Van Otterloo.

He said officials found three bodies in the tail section of the plane, three nearby on the ground, three others in a creek and it wasn't until late Tuesday that the last body was recovered in the wreckage.

Loggers manned ropes at the top of the canyon and pulled bodies clear of the rock wall. The bodies were loaded into a flat-bed truck and taken to the hospital.

3 Tennis Courts Studied For Burnside-Acorn Area

The creation of three tennis courts and a lacrosse box at the proposed Spectrum secondary school in the Burnside-Acorn area, will be considered by the joint planning committee of Saanich aldermen and School District 61 officials.

Saanich's parks and indoor recreation committee considered a request Tuesday that the municipality build the facilities because school board financing did not allow them to do so.

Frank Andrews, assistant parks administrator, told the committee he understood Oak Bay was contemplating a cost-sharing agreement for such facilities with the board.

Saanich will try to negotiate a similar contract.

Andrews was lukewarm to having a lacrosse box at the school, which is scheduled to be built by the fall of 1975.

He said the location where the school officials proposed the lacrosse box was poor because noise from the box was bound to bring numerous complaints from Burnside residents.

He conceded the box could probably be located in another area of the school site.

Andrews estimated the cost of the tennis courts would be $48,000 and the lacrosse box, $26,000, for a total of $74,000.

If a Community Recreation Facilities grant was given by the provincial government, Andrews said this figure would be reduced to $55,500.

In other business, the committee agreed to recommend permanent toilet facilities be planned for Cordova Bay beach and temporary toilet facilities be installed at Agate Lane beach next summer.

Ald. Mel Couvelier said there were many people using the Agate Lane beach when he was there recently.

"With no convenient bushes around for children it's a real problem for desperate mothers," he said.

The committee will also recommend $1,509 be spent to build a wooden handrail bridge at Copley Memorial Park.

Andrews said the bridge was needed to cover a 10-inch sewer pipe, which he was afraid children from the Eastridge subdivision would use to enter the park.

Andrews warned the pipe crossing would present a safety hazard because the water would be eight or nine feet deep at peak level.

Licences Suspended

Two unnamed B.C. firms have had their pesticide licences revoked by the department of agriculture for "improper procedures regarding pesticide use and sales."

"At this point of time we have decided not to release the names of the firms," a provincial spokesman said today.

He said one company did not have a qualified pesticide dispenser on duty while displaying pesticides and, therefore, had its licence suspended for 30 days.

Another firm's licence was cancelled permanently for not abiding by regulations regarding herbicide application on a railway right-of-way.

RELUCTANT YES TO SEATTLE RUN

Victoria will give only qualified endorsement to an application by Air West Airlines Ltd. to operate a float plane passenger service between Victoria's Inner Harbor and Seattle.

In informal caucus discussion Tuesday, city council decided to support the company's application to the federal licensing authority, the Air Transport Commission.

But both the ATC and the Ministry of Transport will be informed of the city's misgivings on the expansion of service, especially the potential for increased noise and hazard.

Aldermen pointed out the scheduled frequency of flights on the Seattle run would be an unknown factor, and said some assurances should be sought from the federal agencies that the "undetermined" number of extra flights would not pose a danger or added noise nuisance.

Ald. Alf Hood and Ald. Tom Christie said the problem is already bad enough in regard to the company's Victoria-Vancouver service.

"I am extremely unhappy about them using the Inner Harbor for a service such as this," said Hood. "The sooner an alternative site is found the better."

Environmental Seminar Set

A seminar on environmental policy will be held by the Liberal party at Canterbury Inn, 310 Gorge Road East, at 6:30 p.m. Thursday.

Liberal leader David Anderson said today the public is invited to attend to discuss the first in a series of about a dozen discussion papers on areas "important to British Columbia."

Policies proposed during the seminars could become Liberal policies Anderson said, if they are accepted at the Liberals' convention in Vernon later in October.

Draftees Protest

DRAGUIGNAN (Reuter) — About 200 young French army draftees broke out of barracks Tuesday and marched through the streets in an anti-military demonstration. Waving clenched fists above their heads in the manner of France's extreme-leftist militants, they chanted slogans against army conditions and held a sit-down meeting outside the local police station.

Japanese Deny Illegal Fishing

The chief officer of the Japanese stern trawler Koyo Maru II denied in provincial court Tuesday the vessel had entered Canadian waters during the eight hours he was on watch Feb. 12.

Takashi Ito, asked by defence counsel Alan Patterson whether the trawler had gone over the fishing line, replied: "Not at all, sir."

Ito — who took a Buddhist oath before testifying — made the same reply when asked if he had intended to sail the Koyo Maru II over the 12-mile fishing line to fish.

Koyo Maru II skipper Tatsuya Itoh is accused of entering Canadian fisheries waters in Queen Charlotte Sound Feb. 12 and being aboard a vessel that unlawfully fished there.

Testimony given earlier was that Koyo Maru II had been sighted by a Tracker aircraft 7½ miles inside the line.

The chief officer said there was a 4.5-mile discrepancy between the location of Koyo Maru II according to calculations made on HMCS Chaudiere and where it was spotted by the tracker.

He admitted that neither of the two radar units on board Koyo Maru II had been used to determine the vessel's position.

The case was adjourned to Friday.

Nursing Mothers Slow on Milk Plea

VANCOUVER (CP) — Response has been so poor to a plea for nursing mothers to help bolster a supply of mother's milk for a nine-month-old Kimberley boy that organizers of a volunteer mothers' milk bank fear they may have to turn down other families.

Shelley Clark of Vancouver, who started the Mothers' Milk Bank of Western Canada earlier this year, said Tuesday only 19 women have offered to help Wesley Barraclough, who is dependent on his mother's milk because of a severe allergy.

The baby requires an extra five ounces a day, or 40 ounces a week more than his mother can provide.

The bank is still helping a mother in Phoenix, whose 22-month-old son breaks out in what appear to be second-degree internal and external burns without his 40 ounces a day of mothers' milk.

The bank is the only source of milk for a 14-month-old baby in Billings, Mont., who requires 16 ounces a day.

Mrs. Clark said there are only three mothers' milk banks in the U.S., and their latest price was $30 an ounce.

Nuclear Ships Eyed

VANCOUVER (CP) — Nuclear cargo ships are on horizon and ports must begin looking into the best and safest way to handle them, the manager of the Port of Vancouver said Tuesday.

F. J. N. Spoke said the nuclear ships look particularly attractive because of rising oil prices.

He said that by 1980 nuclear power for vessels will be competitive for ratings over 40,000 horsepower.

"This makes it mandatory for port managements to investigate thoroughly what special precautionary safety measures might be required to handle and accommodate such ships in port."

OTTAWA (CP) — Energy Minister Donald Macdonald will meet officials of the British Columbia government Sept. 19 to discuss natural gas supplies and prices.

A spokesman for the minister's office said he would be better able to comment on the situation regarding exports to the United States from B.C. after that meeting.

LANGLEY (CP) — Jeffrey Christopher Labrash, 12, of Langley died Tuesday after an accident on his parents' property. The boy was riding a trail bike when he hit a nylon rope strung across the driveway. A 10-year-old companion riding on the back of the bike suffered minor injuries.

VERNON (CP) — A proposal from Education Minister Eileen Dailly to provide on-campus housing for college students is against the basic philosophy of community colleges, Dean Frank Paul of the Vernon Campus of Okanagan College said Tuesday.

Paul said stulent housing causes no problems here although he feels Kelowna may be pushing for it to attract outside students.

In Kelowna, college bursar John Doerksen agreed that student housing is not a problem.

"Local motels terminate their summer rates around Sept. 1, he said "and are able to offer more reasonable rates to students."

VANCOUVER (CP) — City council Tuesday established the basis for redeveloping 100 acres of Vancouver's waterfront between Stanley Park and Main Street.

The framework endorsed calls for creation of 70 acres of open space with a series of buildings averaging six storeys.

The approved report, prepared by federal-city waterfront consultant Dick Mann, would permit a second Project 200 tower of about 20 storeys and 10-storey buildings just north of the Board of Trade Tower and on the Bayshore site. A major park would be built in Gastown.

Leave Abortion Law—MD

VANCOUVER (CP)—Vaguely written abortion legislation may be a good thing, a Vancouver obstetrician said Tuesday.

Dr. Sydney Segal, assistant professor of obstetrics and gynecology at the University of British Columbia, was commenting on a special report of the Canadian Medical Association, released Monday, which called on the government to provide more specific standards.

"Laws have to reflect society at large," Dr. Segal said.

"Until there is some consensus, it is probably meddlesome to interfere more directly.

"It might be better to leave the law as it is and improve the education of people on how it should be interpreted," Dr. Segal said.

The present law allows abortions when the health of the mother is threatened but leaves the interpretation of what constitutes health to the hospital abortion committees.

INDIANS SEEK A-G MEETING

VANCOUVER (CP) — Indians involved in a recent armed roadblock near Cache Creek are seeking a meeting with Attorney-General Alex Macdonald to discuss their complaints of harassment by police here.

About a dozen of the Indians said Tuesday they will stay at the Vancouver Indian Centre here "for protection" until Macdonald responds to their request.

The group demanded the release of Clarence Dennis, one of the Cache Creek demonstrators, who was arrested here Saturday and charged with assault after police attempted to serve a man with a warrant charging breach of probation.

Ken Dennis, spokesman for the group which calls itself the Cache Creek Native Movement, said Monday, "We view this recent arrest as an offensive step in violation of the solemn agreements established."

Kamloops district RCMP superintendent Gordon Dalton said that the arrest of Clarence Dennis has nothing to do with the roadblocking, since Dennis was already sought for a parole violation before participating in the demonstrations.

U.S. Pays UN

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — The United States gave the United Nations a cheque for $10 million Tuesday as the last instalment of its 1974 UN budget assessment. The U.S. mission said the payment was made early "because of the severe financial difficulties" facing the world organization. The U.S. assessment for 1974 was $63,472,429.

Lunchmaker Has All-Seeing Eye on Nutrition

By HILDA BEASTALL

Parents who are home during the day will be fulfilling their obligations to the children by preparing lunches for them to eat at home. Only in this way can it be known what food the children get to nourish their minds and bodies for the hours before suppertime.

The combination of learning and growing is a strenuous time. Only by insisting on a high standard of nutrition for every meal is there any hope of success in both areas. The cost of eating at home is less than that of packing a lunch or buying "something to eat" at school or at a store.

Lunch must be a meal ready on the table, or to be served as soon as you hear the whooping cries of the young approaching on the street. There is no time for loitering, but if you decide there is time for the youngsters to come home at noon there is time for a sustaining meal.

While the weather is warm, serve a cut-up, prepared mixed vegetable salad — a different looking one each day.

Wholewheat buns or thin cheese and peanut butter sandwiches make a good accompaniment. If any are left, there is no waste for you wrap and use for another purpose or for your own more leisurely finishing of lunch after the young have departed. Washed whole apple or a banana are a good dessert, but see that they are eaten before leaving the house. Too often we see nearly whole apples dropped on the ground; and everyone knows the hazard of banana peels.

Once a week make a special treat, such as a September Pie or an Apple Gingerbread.

For these special days make a homemade soup with a split pea and lentil base, adding a handful of any vegetables you have — squash, half a tomato, onion, some wheat germ, brewer's yeast, powdered skim milk.

No last minute preparation with these soups, so the Pie can be timed for taking from the oven while you set the table.

The Lemon Juice Pastry is tender without a lot of fat, it has no baking powder, but it does have the addition of wheat germ and brewer's yeast to the unbleached flour to add protein to the meal.

WITH VACUUM bottles, plastic wraps and containers, nearly any food you would serve for lunch on the table can be taken to school or office without loss of goodness, flavor or temperature. Packing a lunch costs much, much less, too.

SEPTEMBER PIE

Pie crust as below
2 pears
4 cooking apples
1 Tbsp. ground raw peanuts
¼ cup (loose) demerara sugar
2 Tbsp. unbleached flour
Few grains of ginger
2 Tbsp. soft margarine

Lemon Juice Pastry: for 2-crust 9 to 10-inch pie.

3 cups unbleached flour (or use half and half with wholewheat)
1 Tbsp. brewer's yeast
1 tsp. salt
3 Tbsp. wheat germ
¾ cup soft margarine
1 slightly beaten small egg
3 Tbsp. lemon juice with pulp
¼ cup cold water (Approx.)

Make pastry first:

Sift together flour, brewer's yeast and salt; add wheatgerm. Fork in soft margarine. Add egg lightly beaten in a cup with lemon juice, including the pulp. Then add water a little at a time until the dough forms a ball. Divide into two.

Roll one section out thin on a floured board or waxed paper. Waxed paper prevents sticking, and no cleaning after. Place pastry on pie plate loosely without stretching. Roll second piece a little larger.

Pare and dice the pears. Sprinkle ground peanuts on lower crust; cover with pears. Pare and dice apples; pile on top of pears. Dredge with flour and sugar at once. Dot with margarine.

Flip the lower crust over the fruit; turn in surplus edges to build up rim; seal edges and make a few holes with a fork on top.

Bake at 400 degs. for 10 minutes; reduce to 350 degs. for about 35 minutes. Prevent scorching of crust with foil cover is needed.

Make small individual pies in foil plates sometimes when you have the extra minutes. These can be packed cold in lunch boxes for carried lunches. The foil plates are re-usable, therefore inexpensive, and they protect the crust from shattering.

The flavor of this pie is zesty, and nobody will leave the crusts "for the birds".

Another lunchtime-at-home treat is apple gingerbread. Keep the recipe for fall suppers, lunch or for Halloween.

It must be served on plates, with a fork. If you serve cottage cheese or yogurt with it, you add more value for your money.

APPLE GINGERBREAD

2 Tbsp soft margarine
2 medium apples
1 Tbsp fresh lemon juice
2 Tbsp demerara sugar
2 small eggs
½ cup buttermilk or yogurt
¼ cup dark molasses
1 Tbsp demerara sugar
1 cup wholewheat flour
¼ cup unbleached flour
¼ cup soy flour
2 tsp ginger
½ tsp baking soda
½ tsp salt
½ cup soft margarine

In a 6 by 10-inch (or similar) glass dish, melt the 2 tablespoons of margarine. Layer with the pared and thinly sliced apples. Sprinkle at once with lemon juice and sugar to preserve color and vitamins.

Beat eggs in mixing bowl, add buttermilk, molasses and sugar.

list of ingredients, and there is only the one mixing bowl to clean.

Sift remaining dry ingredients, add to egg mixture, stirring well with wooden spoon. Then stir in the soft margarine.

Pour this soft batter over the apples. Bake at 350 degs. for about 30 minutes. Test with clean knife for doneness.

Serve as suggested.

Unwilling Hostess

DEAR ABBY: After 13 years of marriage, my husband and I were divorced for the age-old reason. Another woman. We have two children, 10 and 12, which made it a very painful ordeal for me.

My husband married the "other woman." He has visitation rights, which are fair enough, but when he comes to pick up the children, he and his wife and her eight-year-old son come right to my door. I feel I have to invite them in, and then I have to ask them to sit down. Once they are seated they stay and stay until I feel compelled to offer them some refreshments.

Meanwhile, making small talk with them is sheer torture because I feel so uncomfortable in this woman's presence. I can hardly look at her at my husband's side without wanting to burst into tears.

It seems an eternity until they take my children and leave. They sometimes come back "early," and again they are all at my door, expecting to be invited in. These visits are a terrible strain for me.

I can't help how I feel, Abby. Am I wrong? How should I handle this? — Still Hurting.

DEAR STILL: Ask your lawyer to write your husband a letter suggesting that he either pick up the children alone, or leave his wife and stepchild in the car. You're not wrong. There's no reason why you should be cast in the role of an unwilling hostess.

DEAR ABBY: I was pleased to see that you view reading a spouse's mail as a violation of privacy, and place it in the same class with reading a child's diary or listening in on the extension telephone. Those are exactly my sentiments.

I don't want to see my wife's mail, and that means even after it has been opened and is in plain view. When my wife has had a telephone conversation, I never ask: "Who was that, dear?" I figure if she wants to tell me, she will volunteer the information.

I offer you free of charge my father's philosophy: "Don't ever put another person in the position of having to lie to you." — Values Privacy.

DEAR VALUES: We agree — to a point. But no one "has to" lie. Simply say: "I prefer not to answer that question."

Raising Children In Difficult Times

How to Help Your Child Develop Rich Imagination

By DR. BENJAMIN SPOCK

(Fourth of 10 parts)

It's good, I think, for children to develop a rich imagination. This will give them pleasure all their lives — in being able to lose themselves in books, plays, travel, and daydreams.

On the practical side, people who have imagination can go further in most occupations. This is particularly true, of course, of those in the highly creative professions, such as novelists, poets, dramatists, painters, fashion designers. But it's also true in advertising, science, medicine, manufacturing.

To put it the other way around, the person who is strictly literal-minded has a limited usefulness to the world and a limited capacity for joy.

Simplicity Best

In the second year of life even such simple play activities as putting one block on top of another, looking at picture books, tending dolls, pushing toy cars around on the floor, help to develop imagination. Between 2 and 5 years, children's play will become progressively more complex if they have anything at all to work with.

Some parents assume that the more expensive and elaborate the toy, the better it is for children. This is not often true. It is the simple playthings and play materials that give the widest scope to children's creativity.

No Violence

It's impossible, I think, to exaggerate the importance of reading aloud to children from the age of 2 until they can read enjoyably to themselves — which doesn't come until several years after they have begun the process of learning to read. Stories that are quite simple can be fascinating to young children, so don't look for books that would intrigue you. Consult a librarian or bookseller who deals in children's books if you haven't had experience. There is a great wealth of books these days for children.

It's not necessary to get into stories that are scary or violent in order to interest and stimulate children, and I think it is better to avoid them altogether. It's wise to read slowly to young children and allow them time to ask questions. In other words, they need the opportunity to digest each part of the story and to bend it to their own needs.

Simple playthings give widest creative scope

Desire Acquired

One of the valuable by-products of reading regularly to young children is the craving they develop to learn to read for themselves. We adults who have already learned this skill readily assume that the desire is present in every child. But it isn't. Teachers of deprived children who've never been read to may have to cope with a total absence of motivation at first, which makes the job difficult and slow.

What about the effect of television on the development of the imagination? Parents who grew up in pre-television days and who were great readers of classical literature have been suspicious of television. They feel that the stories and commercials are mostly trash and that having a story presented visually in full detail induces passivity in the viewers and relieves them of any necessity to use their own imaginations.

Educators do not generally agree with this judgment. They believe that the over-all effect of television has been to foster children's imagination, intelligence, and curiosity, especially children from families that provide only an average or less-than-average amount of intellectual and cultural stimulation. In particular, the experts point to the way in which children go to libraries to read about topics that have been featured on television.

TV Can Harm

But I want to say quickly that I don't mean I'd recommend large doses of just any kind of television. I believe programs of violence and brutality are harmful to children, especially young children, and should be forbidden. I also believe children shouldn't be allowed to sit in front of even good television fare all day and all evening. They should be shooed out of the house — or at least away from the set for a major part of their leisure (nonschool) hours in order to exercise their imaginations actively and creatively in play, to practice and enjoy sociability with their friends, and to give their bodies some exercise.

Unreal Friends

Then there are the children who, without encouragement from parents, create an imaginary companion who seems ever-present and more real than the ordinary people around them. (This is quantitatively different from the common situation of the small child who occasionally mentions — in a frankly make-believe spirit — an unreal friend.) The basic causes for this kind of situation may be subtle and hard to determine. But certain factors can be fairly clear.

When the imaginary companion is always doing the naughty things, the real children have somehow come to believe that they would lose entirely their parents' love and their own self-respect if they carried out or even admitted these forbidden impulses.

It would be wise in these cases for the parents to think over their moralizing and disapproval, to see if it has been too severe. In any case, I think they should tell such children from time to time in a sympathetic, affectionate manner that they sometimes want to be naughty — as all children do, occasionally — and that the parents try to help them to be mostly good. This is to ease these children's sense of guilt and let them see themselves a bit more realistically.

When a child's imaginary companion is simply someone to have a good time with, she or he may need more opportunities to play with other real children or some help in learning how to get along with them.

Middle Course

I think it's sensible for the parents of children who constantly refer to an imaginary companion to steer a middle course, not acting as if they believed in the reality of the companion, but on the other hand not ridiculing or arguing with their children. To act as if they believed, to play the children's game, will further weaken their somewhat shaky sense of reality and lead them away from a real solution to whatever their underlying problems are.

To ridicule or argue pushes children away from their parents and intensifies their need for solace through imagination. The middle course is for the parents to listen in an amused but sympathetic manner, as if to show their appreciation of the children's story-telling ability. But now and then they can indicate in a casual way that they realize the companion is imaginary.

Fact, Fantasy

One of the most important everyday jobs that parents have to take on as a matter of course is to teach their children — gradually over the months and years — to distinguish between fantasy and fact. Otherwise children remain immature in some respects.

The job of helping a child to understand reality is one that lasts right up to maturity. One way in which most adolescents differ from adults is that they are so strongly dominated by certain needs — to be accepted by their peers, to be loved by someone of the opposite sex, to appear experienced and worldly — that they impatiently brush aside the realities that threaten to get in the way of the value of certain conversations, the value of being cautious at times, the value of not showing one's hand too soon.

Two Balances

So there are two balances to aim for: to encourage your children to develop enough pleasurable imagination to enrich their real life, but not so much that they prefer to live mainly in a fantasy world; at the same time to encourage them to learn, all through childhood, to be more and more realistic in recognizing their own motives, their responsibilities and their imperfections.

Good Things for the End of Summer

FOOD

By CRAIG CLAIBORNE

EAST HAMPTON, N.Y. —Random thoughts for the end of summer: Who steals my store-bought tomatoes steals trash; who steals my hand-processed tomatoes steals gold.

Rarely can we remember a time of such prolonged drought as we've endured the last few months. Despite the vagaries of the season, however, the local markets in our area are coming into their own now with a bountiful supply o ftomatoes, an abundance of new cabbages and a score of other marvels to "put up" for the winter ahead.

For us, the "putting up" of foods offers the same sense of gratification as found in breadmaking.

Herein we offer a potpurri of good things for the end of summer—things to be processed. They include home-cured sauerkraut made from fresh cabbage, and an end-of-summer relish from a friend in New Jersey. Incidentally, in the relish recipe there is a need for green tomatoes. These are usually available on special order from tomato-producing markets.

One of the best and most comprehensive books on home canning is "The Blue Book of Canning," published by The Ball Corporation, manufacturers of mason jars. The book is available for $1 postpaid by writing, The Ball Corporation, Muncie Ind., 47302. The recipe for sauerkraut, printed here, is adapted from that book. A companion volume on freezing fresh produce is also available for 50 cents.

HOW TO MAKE SAUERKRAUT FROM FRESH CABBAGE

50 pounds white cabbage, 1 pound pure granulated salt (noniodized).

1. Remove and discard the other leaves and any other bruised or otherwise blemished leaves of the cabbage.

2. Cut the cabbage into halves, then into quarters cut away the white tough center cores.

3. Using a shredder or sharp slicer, cut the cabbage into fine shreds about the thickness of a penny.

4. In a kettle combine 5 pounds of the shreds with 3 tablespoons of salt. Blend well and let stand 15 minutes or so, until the cabbage wilts and gives up part of its liquid. Transfer this to a large sterilized crock. Add alternative layers of cabbage and salt, pressing down gently but firmly after each layer is added until joice comes to the surface. Continue until the crock is filled to within three or four inches of the top.

5. Cover the cabbage with a clean white cloth such as a double layer of cheesecloth, tucking in the sides against the inside of the container. Add a free-floating lid that will fit inside the crock and rest on the cabbage. Failing this (perhaps even preferably), add a clean, heavy plastic bag containing water to rest on top of the cabbage. Whatever method is used, the lid or covering should extend over the cabbage to prevent exposure to the air. Air will cause the growth of film yeast or molds. The lid will also act as a weight and should offer enough weight to keep the fermenting cabbage covered with brine. Store the crock at room temperature. The ideal temperature is from 68 to 72 degrees.

6. When fermentation occurs, gas bubbles will occur in the crock. Total time of fermentation is approximately five to six weeks.

HOW TO PRESERVE FRESH SAUERKRAUT

When the sauerkraut has fermented sufficiently empty it into a large kettle and bring it just to the simmer. Do not boil. The correct simmering temperature is from 185 to 210 degrees. Remove the sauerkraut from the heat and pack it into hot sterilized jars. Cover with hot juice to about half an inch from the top of the rim. Close and seal the jars with a lid and screw top. Put in a water bath and process pint jars for 15 minutes; quart jars for 20 minutes. The sauerkraut is now ready to be stored. It will keep on the shelf for months.

Here is a method of processing tomatoes:

1. If the tomatoes still have traces of soil on them, rinse well and drain.

2. Bring enough water to the boil to cover the tomatoes when the yare added. When the water is vigorously boiling, add a batch of tomatoes. Use extreme caution, taking care that the water does not splash on you. Let the tomaties stand 30 seconds (a few seconds longer isn't crucial, but don't overdo it).

3. Have an empty colander, a basic size or a large one, handy. Again with extreme caution drain the tomatoes and run under cold water. Let stand until cool enough to handle.

4. Cut out the cores from the tomatoes and peel them. After the boiling-water bath, the skin comes away easily.

5. Leave the tomatoes whole or quarter them. Pack them into quart, pink of half-pint jars. Press the air spaces in the jars with a spatula to release the air. Add a few crushed tomato pieces to the jar to bring the tomatoes to within a half-inch of the rim. (Be sure to leave the half-inch of head space).

6. Add one teaspoon of salt for each quart of tomatoes. If available, add a small spring or a leaf of fresh basil to each jar.

7. Wipe the top of each jar and add a lid and screw top. Seal tightly.

8. Arrange the jars in the rack of a canner in hot but not boiling water. The canner should be a least half full of water before the jars are added. When the jars on the rack are lowered into the water, they should be covered by one or two inches.

9. Cover the canner and bring the water to the boil. After it boils, process pint jars 35 mintues, quart jars 45 minutes. During processing, the water should remain at a gentle but steady boil.

10. Lift the rack from the canner and let it rest on its supports. Remove the jars from the water and let stand at room temperature for 12 hours. If desired, screw bands may now be removed from the jars. To test or sealing, press down the center of the lid. If the dome is already down or remains down when pressed, the jar is properly sealed.

ARIES (March 21 - April 19): Emphasis is on what you create, your own style and ideas — and special relationship with offspring. If single, you could encounter person who makes you wish it was otherwise. You dwell inwardly, self-analysis is featured. You get in touch with you — and it could be a revelation.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Emphasis is on the solid, the square, the no-nonsense atmosphere and your ability to deal with one who pulls reins of authority. Key, of course, is to be deliberate, factual and have information at fingertips. Capricorn, Cancer persons could figure prominently.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Finish rather than initiate projects. Highlight flexibility. Realize you can successfully let go of past. A relationship that turns into a burden is no longer constructive. Know it and be grown-up about it and — let go!

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You get money through original methods, not by imitating or being a robot. Means strike out on your own — or get a "homer" on your own. Stay away from committees. Collect needed material and then get going. Independence and originality will be valued commodities.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): You are at right place at right time. Cycle is high and your intuitive intellect is honed to razor sharpness. Follow through; take initiative. Lead the way. Emphasize style, appearance and personality. Aquarian is in picture.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Don't make federal case of minor irritant. Means ride with the tide and bide your time. Events occur behind the scenes and you require additional information. Do more asking than asserting. Gemini, Sagittarius could figure prominently.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Some friends may seem slow, plodding. Key is to be patient, understanding without abandoning principles. You will learn valuable lesson. Be receptive — and don't permit false flattery or pride to block progress.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Accent is on career, ambition, prestige, willingness to make sacrifices for room at the top. The written word now is important. Get ideas, thoughts, concepts, formats on paper. One in authority is willing to give you a chance if material is properly prepared.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Good lunar aspect coincides now with pleasure, advancement, knowledge and an awareness of your potential. You gain enlightenment. What you do as a result may depend, to some extent, on current family situation. Be diplomatic. Win rather than force — Taurus, Libra will come to your side.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Much that should be obvious seems to be covered, obscured. Avoid trap of self-deception. Strive to see in realistic way. Includes tax picture, financial status of partner, mate and insurance coverage. Pisces, Virgo are likely to be involved.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Close deals. Means stop procrastinating. Use knowledge. Move with confidence once legal matters have been thoroughly checked. Older individual is willing to lend benefit of experience. Be receptive and aware of public relations. Message should become increasingly clear.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You are relieved of burden, especially in employment area. Means some details are taken away and you are permitted greater degree of self-expression, creativity. One you care for confides problem. Don't cast first stone.

IF TODAY IS YOUR BIRTHDAY you have an abundance of curiosity — you love travel, entertaining, reading and being where the action is. You would make fine reporter — you attract to you persons who write, create and influence the times. Domestic adjustment this year is magnified in September. Gemini, Sagittarius persons could play key roles in your life.

Pickle Sheet On the Shelf

Preserve a peck of pickles . . . and capture the goodness of B.C. fruits and vegetables for year-round eating enjoyment.

With preserving so popular nowadays, B.C. Food Information recipe sheet "B.C. Grown Vegetables Pickled" contains timely pickling recipes — Mixed Mustard Pickles, Garlic-Dill Tomatoes, Pickled Beets and Hot Chili Sauce. It also includes a handy "Weights and Measures" guide for pickling. Look for this current recipe sheet at your nearby food stores.

When pickling, use only top quality, firm, fresh fruits and vegetables. Fruits may be slightly under-ripe. Cucumbers are best pickled within 24 hours of picking.

A Change of Chinese Food

Anyone who thinks about preparing Chinese food envisions standing over a burning stove peering into pot of sizzling oil while all the guests are sitting patiently at the table, waiting for dinner.

Not that you can't cook Chinese food that way, if you like. You pop up and down between dishes like a yo-yo, hardly sitting still long enough to receive compliments if the food is any good.

But there are other ways to cook and eat in Chinese and that doesn't mean going to a restaurant. Not only do the Chinese use other cooking methods besides the last-minute stir-fry technique, such as steaming, braising and barbecuing; they also serve some foods cold. And a menu made up of these foods makes an unusual and delicious backyard barbecue.

The main dish is spareribs, barbecued on the grill. There is a cold salad of marinated cucumbers.

Whenever a picnic menu is offered it is always accompanied by the standard warning — if you don't want your outing to end up in the hospital observe these food safety rules:

—Keep hot foods hot — above 140 degrees.

—Keep cold foods cold — below 40 degrees.

Temperatures between 40 and 140 degrees encourage the growth of bacteria responsible for several different kinds of food poisoning. Some of them can make you very sick.

If you keep the foods which are to be served at room temperature chilled until you get to the picnic, they will warm up quickly in the late-summer heat.

CHINESE BARBECUED SPARERIBS

Serves 12

1½ cups hoisin sauce
6 tablespoons yellow bean sauce
3 tablespoons Chinese soy sauce
3 tablespoons brown sugar
2 tablespoons fresh ginger, chopped
12 pounds lean spare ribs

Blend all ingredients, except ribs, to thick paste. Parboil ribs in water to cover for 30 minutes, then rub both sides of ribs with mixture and let stand for two hours or longer in refrigerator.

To cook, place ribs 8 to 10 inches away from hot coals. Cook slowly, turning often. Grill for about 20 minutes, basting with remaining paste. Test by cutting between bones; juices should run clear. Cut ribs and serve with a hot mustard.

MARINATED CUCUMBERS

Serves 12

6 medium cucumbers
12 scallions, minced
6 cloves garlic, minced
¾ cup white vinegar
1 tablespoon salt
Sesame oil, optional

Peel cucumbers and slice very thinly or sliver. Combine minced scallions, vinegar, garlic and salt. Pour over cucumbers and toss. Refrigerate. Just before serving, cucumbers can be sprinkled with a few drops of sesame oil, if desired.

YOUR TURN TO COOK: SAUCE FOR SPAGHETTI

By NATHANIEL LONG

(Today's reader recipe was submitted by Nathaniel Long of Brentwood Bay. If you have a favorite or family dish you would like to share, mail the recipe to the Family Desk, The Times, 2621 Douglas, Victoria, V8W 2N4.)

For seven years now, my wife has been getting praise from family and friends for her spaghetti sauce, both for its flavor and its consistency — its one of the few sauces that clings to the spaghetti without having the flavor diluted by a thickner such as flour or corn starch.

And it has a special flavor for me as it was through this recipe that I met my wife.

In my bachelor days, I had gone to a party at the home of a girl friend where this spaghetti sauce was served. I enjoyed it so much that the next week, when I was again facing the bachelor's choice of Kraft dinner or the quick-n-dirty round the corner for supper, I went around to see the girl's mother for the recipe.

While I was there, a daughter of a friend of the mother was there visiting. She had been studying Spanish and was saving for a trip to Mexico. I was also learning the language and we decided to meet once a week.

We started dating regularly and six months later we were married and both went to Mexico.

SHIRLEY'S MOTHER'S SPAGHETTI SAUCE

2 cans tomato soup
1 can tomato paste
dash of salt, pepper
½ tsp. curry powder
1 tsp ground chili pepper
3 cloves garlic
2 tbsp brown sugar
½ cup olive oil
1 lb hamburger
1 large onion

Brown the hamburger and onion in the olive oil, mix in all the other ingredients, then simmer for two to three hours, stirring occasionally.

Served over a heap of not-over-cooked spaghetti, with hot garlic bread, a tossed salad and dry red wine, it's a meal to give any one their own pleasant memories.

Lunchbox Spreads Use Imagination

Back to school and office means a return to a more regular routine for many Victorians. This includes packing the daily lunch box. This need not be a chore if you keep a good supply of sliced cold meats on hand — and there is such a wide variety to choose from these days. In addition to the old standbys — ham, bologna, and luncheon meat, there are other cold cuts available. Peperoni, Dutch salami, spiced ham, pickle and pimiento, Polish or beer sausage to name a few.

Cold cuts come in flavor-tight packages to protect the flavour until opened. The slices are paper thin, making them excellent for layering in sandwiches.

Add a touch of class to the lunch box by varying the bread — pumpernickel, rye, whole wheat or French bread, add interesting variety. Pep up the butter or margarine by adding one or a combination of the following: Chopped dill; chives or parsley; lemon juice; tabasco or Worcestershire sauce; scraped one; dry mustard or horseradish; rubbed sage; rosemary or thyme.

A leaf of lettuce, a spoonful of coleslaw or a slice of tomato or avocado and a dill pickle will add flavor, moisture and "crunch" to the sandwich. Wrap the sandwich carefully to protect its freshness. Home-made cookies and fresh fruit will complete the lunch nicely.

INTERESTING SPREADS

"Maitre de" Butter — Add 2 tablespoons each lemon juice and chopped parsley to ¼ cup creamed butter or margarine.

Chive Butter — Add 1 tablespoon chopped chives and ½ teaspoon lemon juice to ¼ cup creamed butter.

Dill Butter — Add 2 tablespoons lemon juice and 1 teaspoon chopped dill (fresh or dried) to ¼ cup creamed butter.

Mustard Butter. — Add 1 tablespoon prepared mustard or ¼ teaspoon dry mustard to ¼ cup creamed butter.

Cheese Butter — Add 1 cup grated cheddar cheese and 1 teaspoon chopped chives (optional) to ¼ cup creamed butter.

Pimiento Cheese Spread — Add 2 tablespoons finely chopped celery and ½ teaspoon scraped onion to 4 oz. pimiento cheese. Use with or in place of butter.

Cranberry Cream Cheese Spread — Add 2 to 3 tablespoons cranberr sauce to 4 oz. cream creese. Great with turkey, chicken or ham.

PLUM GOOD EATS

September is here . . . so are plums. What charming names they have — as appealing as their taste and appearance — Green Gage, Burbank, Grand Duke, Italian prunes.

Plums make a rainbow of colors in your fruit bowl, from cool yellow-green to softly speckled reds, bright reds and deep purples. Their flavors vary with the variety, some sweeter than others, some more tart.

Shop carefully. Plums of good quality are plump, clean, full-colored according to the variety, and soft enough to yield to slight pressure. Softening at the tip is a good indication of maturity. Immature fruit is hard. Overmature fruit is generally soft and easily bruised.

PEACHES WITH PLUM SAUCE

1 cup sugar
½ cup water
1 teaspoon grated orange rind
2 cups halved pitted prune plums
1 tablespoon orange juice
6 peeled sliced peaches
½ cup whipping cream, whipped

Combine first three ingredients and bring to boil. Add plums, cover and simmer until tender (about 15 minutes). Add orange juice. Puree through sieve or in blender. Chill. Arrange peaches in sherbet dishes, pour plum sauce over and top with whipped cream. Six servings.

Fruits and Vegetables Are Easily Dried

By MARIAN BURROS

Drying fruits and vegetables is not a task to be undertaken lightly: All of the tedious chores that must be performed for freezing or canning are required for drying. And, in addition, the drying itself takes anywhere from two to 12 hours.

But with the disappearance of canning equipment from store shelves this summer, it's almost impossible to can. And without a freezer, you can't do any freezing. The alternative would be drying.

Here are all the DON'TS learned by trial and error:

—Don't use metal trays — the food picks up a metallic taste. To get wooden trays without having to build them try the supermarket. They might part with the shallow crates in which some produce is shipped. For drying, remove the sides of the crates.

—Don't put more than a single layer of slices on a tray or they will not dry properly.

—Don't oversteam the vegetables or they will become mushy and cannot be sliced. If you can't slice them, you can't dry them.

—While apples, apricots, peaches and nectarines need an ascorbic acid solution to prevent discoloration, bananas and plums should not be dipped in it.

TO DRY FRUITS

For ascorbic acid you might crush Vitamin C pills. During the canning season ascorbic acid is often found in powdered form. For apples, dissolve 2½ teaspoons ascorbic acid in 1 cup water.

For pears, apricots, peaches and nectarines, dissolve 1 teaspon ascorbic acid in 1 cut water.

APPLES AND PEARS

Peel, core and slice fruits as thinly as possible, about ⅛ inch thick. Coat with ascorbic acid solution. Steam for 5 minutes. Place on trays in oven at lowest temperature.

Prop door open slightly. Check every hour and rotate trays. Apples take 8 to 12 hours, depending on size and thickness of slices. They are dry when they are leathery. Cool and store in plastic bags. Squeeze out all of the air and tie bags. They should last a year if stored properly.

BANANAS

Peel and slice thinly. Do not steam or coat with ascorbic acid solution. Follow directions for apples.

APRICOTS, NECTARINES, PLUMS

Steam peeled and sliced fruit for 5 minutes. Follow apple directions (Plums also do not need ascorbic-acid treatment).

PEACHES

Steam peeled and sliced fruit 8 minutes. Follow directions for apples.

Depending on the thickness and size of the slices, the fruits can take as little as 5 hours to dry, as much as 12 hours. You have to keep watching and removing the slices as they are done.

TO DRY VEGETABLES

All vegetables require pasteurization after drying, which simply means raising the oven temperature to 175 degrees for 10 minutes.

Vegetables that are mainly liquid, such as tomatoes and cucumbers, cannot be dried. There would nothing left but the seeds.

GREEN BEANS

Wash and "French" the beans which means, cut them in half lengthwise. Steam for 15 minutes. Place them on racks and dry according to directions for apples. When they are dry they are brittle. Drying takes 2 to 3 hours. Then pasteurize them as directed above.

CARROTS

Trim and peel. Steam for 20 minutes. Slice thinly and dry for about 2 hours. Pasteurize.

SWEET POTATOES

Steam whole for 30 to 40 minutes. Peel and slice; dry and pasteurize.

Egg Patties Moneysavers

In the dwindling days of summer, foods that are fast and easy to prepare have tremendous appeal. And if the words economical and nutritious can be added to the list of adjectives the dish is bound to be a success. "Egg Patties" suggested by Food Advisory Services as a money-saving dish, fits just this description. Chopped hard-cooked eggs, grated cheese and bread crumbs are combined with seasonings, shaped into patties and browned quickly.

EGG PATTIES

½ cup finely chopped onion
1 tablespoon margarine
2 cups soft bread crumbs
1 teaspoon salt
½ cup water
3 tablespoons skim milk powder
6 hard-cooked eggs, chopped
1 cup grated cheddar cheese
1 tablespoon flour
1 tablespoon paprika
2 tablespoons margarine

Saute onion in 1 tablespoon margarine until transparent. Stir in bread crumbs, salt, water and skim milk powder. Remove from heat. Add eggs and cheese. Cool and shape into 6 patties. Srpinkle lightly with flour and paprika. Brown 2 minutes each side in remaining 2 tablespoons margarine. 6 servings.

Peach Chiffon Dessert is a moneysaver featuring fresh peaches while they are plentiful. However, its light and delicate flavor and appearance belies its low cost. Peach jelly powder and an egg white stretch three peaches to make six delightful servings.

Buy fresh fruit and vegetables when they are in season. Not only are they ususally lower in price and higher in quality but they also offer delicious freshness and flavor as a bonus. Wasted fruits and vegetables are expensive so buy top quality produce and in amounts that can be used within a few days.

PEACH CHIFFON DESSERT

1 3-ounce package peach jelly powder
¼ cup sugar
1½ cups boiling water
1 egg white
Dash salt
2 tablespoons sugar
1¾ cups diced fresh peaches (3 medium)

Combine jelly powder, sugar and boiling water. Stir until dissolved. Chill until partially set. Beat until frothy. Beat egg white and salt until soft peaks form. Gradually add sugar and beat until stiff and glossy. Fold into jelly mixture. Let partially set. Fold in peaches. Spoon into serving dishes and chill. 6 servings.

CIA, Chile: Deceit as Art Form

WASHINGTON — The U.S. State Department has found itself in the centre of a growing Congressional furore over the disclosure that some $11 million in U.S. funds had been authorized for covert political action against the late Chilean President Salvador Allende.

In the face of new charges that the State Department misled Congress on the issue of U.S. intervention in Chile, a department spokesman Monday stood by sworn testimony of officials on Capitol Hill that the U.S. pursued a policy of non-intervention toward Chile during the Allende period.

The new round of controversy over U.S. foreign policy in Chile was triggered by the disclosure Sunday of testimony by CIA Director William E. Colby to a House Armed Service subcommittee last April 22. In that testimony he disclosed that $3 million in covert funds was targeted against Allende's candidacy in 1964, and more than $8 million was authorized to block his 1970 election and "destabilize" his government between 1970 and his overthrow in September, 1973.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy (D-Mass.), chairman of a Senats refugee subcommittee which is investigating human rights violations in Chile, said Monday the disclosure of CIA funding of Allende's opposition "represents not only a flagrant violation of our alleged policy of non-intervention in Chilean affairs, but also an apalling lack of forthrightness with the Congress."

He noted that covert political funding, such as was acknowledged by Colby, "has been denied time and time again by high officials of the Nixon and now the Ford administration."

Kennedy called for full Congressional investigation of the discrepancies in the official versions of what the U.S. did in Chile during the Allende period.

Jerome Levinson, counsel for the Senate Foreign Relations Committee's multinational subcommittee, said "there is no doubt that we were misled" by State Department witnesses who testified last year that the U.S. did not undertake covert activities against Allende.

Former Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs Chales A. Neyer, gave sworn testimony to the subcommittee March 29, 1973 that "the policy of the government . . . was that there would be no intervention in the political affairs of Chile . . . We financed no candidates, no political parties . . ."

Last June 12 Acting Assistant Secretary of State Harry Shulaudeman told a House Foreign Affairs subcommittee: "Despite pressures to the contrary, the U.S. government adhered to a policy of non-intervention in Chile's affairs during the Allende period. That policy remains in force today . . ."

When pressed by Rep. Donald M. Fraser (D-Minn.) on whether "you are prepared today to deny an assertion that the U.S. funnelled money covertly to opposition parties following the 1970 election in Chile," Shlaudeman responded: "I am not . . ."

Fraser, chairman of a House Foreign Affairs subcommittee on international organizations, charged that "the Executive Branch has deceived the Congress as well as the public with respect to its involvement in the overthrow of the Allende regime."

State Department spokesman Robert Anderson said "we stand by the statements that have been made in the past." He declined to confirm or deny the report of Colby's testimony published Sunday in The Washington Post.

Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger similarly declined through a spokesman to respond to Colby's testimony, which was recounted in a confidential letter from Rep. Michael Harrington (D—Mass.) to House Foreign Affairs Committee chairman Rep. Thomas E. Morgan (D—Pa.) appealing for further Congressional inquiry into the covert operations in Chile.

Kissinger was chairman of a meeting of the "Forty Committee" on June 27, 1970, when the question of covert political action against Allende was taken up. Kissinger, according to records of the proceeding, favored a limited and thoroughly concealed program of intervention.

The State Department, according to sources with access to inter-departmental records of the deliberations, opposed CIA intervention in the Allende election but abandoned its opposition when President Nixon ratified a limited program of intervention for which some $350,000 to $400,000 was authorized by the Forty Committee.

Kissinger was quoted in minutes of the June 27 top-secret meeting at the White House as having said: "I don't see why we need to stand by and watch a country go Communist due to the irresponsibility of its own people."

A spokesman for the secretary said Monday that Mr. Kissinger had no recollection of having made such an observation and would not comment on his role in the deliberations.

Colby's closed-session testimony to the House Armed Service subcommittee, as recounted in the Harrington letter, was that the CIA's role in the 1970 Chilean election was that of a "spoiler" engaged in "general attempts to politically destabilize the country and discredit Allende to improve the likelihood that an opposition candidate would win."

The Forty Committee, which is an inter-departmental White House panel supervising all U.S. covert operations, authorized a steady outpouring of funds into Chile through individuals, political parties and news media through Latin American and European channels during the anti-Allende effort, according to the summary of Colby's testimony.

Kissinger on various occasions had expressed personal reservations about the emergency of the Allende government, which was committed to a program of nationalization and income re-distribution.

After Allende's popular election in September, 1970, but before the Congressional run-off there, Kissinger told a group of editors at the White House that "it is fairly easy for one to predict that if Allende wins, there is a good chance that he will establish over a period of years some sort of Communist government . . .

"So I don't think we should delude ourselves that an Allende take-over in Chile would not present massive problems for us, and for democratic forces and pro-U.S. forces in Latin America . . ."

But Kissinger added that the situation was not one "in which our capacity for influence is very great at this particular moment now that matters have reached this particular point."

It was during this period that the CIA and International Telephone and Telegraph Co. sought activity to undermine Allende's prospects for election, according to testimony which emerged last year before the Senate Foreign Relations multinational subcommittee, and recently corroborated in far greater detail by CIA Director Colby.

The Washington Post

KISSINGER: WHAT ROLE?

WASHINGTON (AP) — Representative Harrington wants a House of Representatives inquiry to determine whether State Secretary Henry Kissinger approved a CIA effort to undermine former Chilean President Salvador Allende.

The Massachusetts Democrat said he believes Kissinger gave the go-shead. He cited what he said was testimony from CIA Director William Colby that the $8-million-plus effort was approved by the 40 Committee.

"The 40 Committee is Kissinger," Harrington said in a telephone interview. "It was then and it is now."

Indians Accuse Attorney-General Of Breaking Word

VANCOUVER (CP) — Indians involved in a recent armed roadblock near Cache Creek, B.C., say Attorney-General Alex Macdonald has broken a promise not to lay criminal charges against participants in the blockade.

Clarence Dennis, 32, a militant Indian leader, was arrested here Saturday and charged with assault after police attempted to serve a man with a warrant charging breach of probation.

The Indians, who call themselves the Cache Creek Native Movement, said here Monday that "we view this recent arrest as an offensive step in violation of the solemn agreements established."

Police said, however, that the breach of probation warrant was issued by the National Parole Service before the latest blockade during the Labor Day weekend.

Indians blockaded the highway then and in mid-August to protest housing on the Bonaparte Reserve at Cache Creek, about 175 miles north-east of here.

Street Corners Missed In Modern, Lonely City

By MICHAEL ARKUS

BRASILIA (Reuter) — Fourteen years after its inauguration, inhabitants of this ultra-modern capital are convinced that the city's planners made a fundafental sociological error—they forgot the street corner.

For with all its futuristic design, its sweeping motorways unencumbered by traffic lights and jams and its freedom from pollution, Brasilia is a lonely city.

And this, many of its inhabitants say, is because of the absence of the traditional street corner, were residents can meet and talk.

In fact there are virtually no traditional-style streets in Brasilia, the fastest-growing city in the country, with a population of 700,000.

Vast axes with countless underpasses radiate outwards from the monumental avenue of government buildings in the centre.

Along them are scattered "superquadras," huge superblocks of flats, set back among lawns, each a fair distance from the next. There are no real streets as such, no neighborhood cafes and bars and hence few people are about at night.

In the small central area near the bus station there are a few cinemas and night clubs but these do not provide a focal point.

In fact, its more gloomy inhabitants complain, Brasilia has no soul, for this can only come to a town which has grown up over the years by natural processes.

When urban designer Lucio Costa and architect Oscar Niemeyer planned the city in the 1950s on what was then only bush and scrub, they were not thinking in terms of social contact and human warmth.

They were thinking of a new administrative capital, dreamed of for more than half a century, which would act as a magnet to draw the population away from the coastal strip and develop Brazil's vast hinterland.

So it was natural that the austere new city, set on a 3,600-foot plateau 760 miles north of Rio de Janeiro and far from the sea, should invite unfavorable comparison with the former capital, famous for its beautiful scenery, miles of beaches and wild carnival.

In the early days government workers forced to live here would fly back to Rio on weekends, and on any other pretext they could find.

But the city grew and virtually all government agencies were transferred here. Some of them are housed in buildings of striking architectural design — the presidential palace of Planalto with its graceful upcurved buttresses, the foreign ministry with its pond and arches, the justice ministry with its cascades of water flowing down the facade.

The diplomatic corps has moved here too with only consular sections remaining in the former capital.

Judging by current growth, Brasilia and the surrounding federal district will have a population of millions by the end of the century, although originally it was destined to have no more than 700,000.

President Ernesto Geisel has called back Costa to discuss the technical issues of further extending the city.

Even if it does prove lonely for the older people used to the excitement of Rio, the younger generations brought up here will no doubt come to terms with the new environment.

For Brasilia has its advantages—clear, unpolluted air, open spaces and freedom from the stresses of the older, overcrowded cities.

Study First, Then Needle

An acupuncture clinic in Victoria won't be opened until the provincial government has had a chance to study operation of a clinic to be opened this fall at Vancouver General Hospital.

Health Minister Dennis Cocke said Monday the Vancouver clinic is four to six weeks from opening.

No site has been settled on for the Victoria clinic but both clinics initially will be devoted to treatment of pain only by acupuncture.

Saucers Terrify Farmer

LANGENBURG, Sask. (CP) — RCMP Constable Ron Morier says he doesn't think a district farmer is trying to pull a hoax with his claim of seeing saucer-shaped objects hovering about a foot over a slough near his rapeseed field six miles north of here.

Edwin Fuhr, 36, claims five stainless steel objects stayed for 15 minutes before leaving. He says there were depressions in the foot-high grass about 11 feet in diameter where they had been.

Constable Morier visited the farm Monday in this community 120 miles northeast of Regina.

"They took me out to where they'd seen these things in the grass," he said. "I saw the rings.

"Something was there and I doubt it was a hoax. There's no indication anything had been wheeled in or out and Mr. Fuhr seemed genuinely scared."

Constable Morier took photographs and measurements and sent his information to the National Research Council in Ottawa.

Fuhr points out marks where saucer landed

"Some farmers are afraid to work their fields," the constable said. "At least that's what I hear on coffee row."

Fuhr says he got down from his swather and moved to within 15 feet of the objects.

"All of a sudden I noticed the grass was moving ... turning near this thing. I just watched it for about two minutes and then noticed that the whole thing was turning.

"I backed up slow. I wasn't going to turn my back on the thing. When I got back to the swather, I noticed there were another four to the left of me, all revolving. I just froze on the seat and didn't move.

"I was terrified. I froze. I couldn't do anything.

"Then they took off after 15 minutes ... straight up. There was a grey vapor coming from underneath them and a strong wind."

It took two minutes for the objects to disappear into the clouds and another two minutes for Fuhr to come down from his swather.

"I wanted to be sure they were gone."

He then examined the circular depressions left by the objects.

"I felt the grass to see if it was warm. There was nothing you could feel and there wasn't any smell."

Nickname Sparks Uproar

PEKIN, Ill. (Reuter) — Cheerleaders of the community high school basketball team of Pekin—Illinois, not China — were shouting "C-H-I-N-K-S, Chinks, Chinks, Chinks."

Chinese-Americans, watching the game on television, heard the school cry, sat up and soon were writing to their senators and local municipal officials demanding the name be changed.

The result is a dismayed and surprised town of Pekin, which has been rooting for "the Chinks" for 30 years and is wondering why it should change the name now.

But the Illinois State Commission on Human Relations is committed to a name change.

"I'll fight as vigorously as if the team was called the Pekin Niggers," Connie Seals, the commission executive director, said.

NAMED AFTER CHINA

One story goes that this Mid-West town, 150 miles southwest of Chicago, was named Pekin when a lady spun a globe and put her finger on it when it stopped.

She was pointing at Peking, China, and that was the name-minus the G—given this then tiny settlement.

Another version has it that the settlers believed their town was at the opposite end of the world to Peking.

The dragon became the symbol of the community high school and the town's policemen wear a red dragon emblem on their shoulders.

Lester Foote, assistant superintendent of the high school, said he believes a newspaper reporter gave the name "the Chinks" to the school's basketball team, and also its athletic and football teams.

"The name has never meant anything derogatory here," he said. "In fact, we look on the name with pride. Students here have for 30 years been proud to be called the Chinks."

"We certainly never meant to insult the Chinese."

"Now we face the problem of how we can change the name when it has never been officially adopted by the school. It is just a nickname.'

He said there are a few Chinese at the school and they had never objected to the name.

The town's mayor, William Waldmeier, said he thinks a change of name is unnecessary.

"There are better ways of helping minority races than changing names," he said.

"Noone here regards the Chinks as a derogatory term."

But a group of Chinese-Americans is insisting the name be changed. A spokesman for the group said the name has the same connotations as Dago and Jap and other nicknames used by bigots.

A meeting has been arranged between the mayor and representatives of the State Commission on Human Relations and the group of Chinese-Americans to discuss the matter.

A member of the commission said she did not want to try to impose a new nickname on the school teams.

"But how about the Dragons?" she suggested.

Soviets Gaining Power, U.S. Admiral Warns

OTTAWA (UPI) — The Soviet Union is on the verge of obtaining a significant margin of strategic superiority over Western powers, U.S. Admiral Elmo Zumwalt said in a working paper read here today.

The former chief of U.S. naval operations told delegates at a meeting of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization that NATO members would have to sacrifice short-term economic benefits in the interest of long-term strategic gains to balance those of the Soviets.

Zumwalt's paper was read to the meeting by U.S. Admiral Ralph Cousins, Strategic Air Command (Atlantic). It covered a broad range of topics related to the balance between NATO and Warsaw-Pact nations.

Zumwalt said the Soviet Union had devoted "massive resources to the long-term objective of clear cut superiority in all facets of military power.

"Nowhere is this clearer than in the strategic area where combination of well thought out research and development programs have placed them on the verge of obtaining a significant margin of strategic superiority."

He said also that NATO member nations had to expand their sphere of interest beyond the geographical boundaries of the treaty area to include far-flung regions of strategic importance.

Detente, he said, was "a central element of the Soviet political offensive designed to obtain important Soviet strategic objectives in Europe."

Economic, political and military matters were increasingly interdependent among nations and had to be considered as a whole in strategic planning, Zumwalt said.

NATO members, including the United States, have to avoid using their current economic troubles as an excuse to cut back on their armaments, since such a move would leave them vulnerable to the Soviet bloc, Zumwalt said.

"If we neglect the Soviet challenge, the Alliance may never receive the opportunity to deal with its economic problems," he said.

Zumwalt's working paper stated "in addition to the well recognized fragility of the Mideast peace, the southern flank of NATO is showing disturbing signs of instability while the northern flank increasingly finds itself behind advancing lines of the Soviet naval perimeter.

"Thus it would not be unrealistic to suggest that the Alliance may once again be called to a test of wills in this increasingly interdependent but continuingly dangerous world," he said.

The admiral said reaction to the October, 1973, war in the Mideast illustrated the danger of sacrificing short-term gains on the economic level for strategic interests.

"The Europeans viewed U.S.-supported Israeli intransigence as potentially imperiling their essential oil supplies. The relative economic penalties which they saw as likely to flow from overt support of the U.S. position tended to overshadow any perceived danger to NATO interests from Soviet support of the Arab cause."

Zumwalt said that prior to the alerting of U.S. forces during the Mideast crisis "the Soviets were on the verge of unilaterally introducing Soviet airborne forces directly into the October war."

But, despite this threat which he said occurred, America's NATO allies had been angered by the declaration of the alert without notification to the Atlantic partners.

BAD TRIP AT THE DENTIST'S

LONDON (UPI) — Those who smoke marijuana before going to the dentist may be in for a bad trip.

"The stress of dental or oral surgical procedures in the patient who has fortified himself with marijuana may precipitate an acute psychotic episode, a bad trip," Dr. E. W. Small told delegates at the 62nd World Dental Congress Monday.

"In effect, the patient may become schizophrenic," he said.

Small reported on a study conducted at the dental research centre of the University of North Carolina, "an investigation prompted by a growing awareness of some negative effects of marijuana."

Ten volunteers took part in the study. Each was given an experimental sedating drug which was a derivative of marijuana prior to having a wisdom tooth extracted.

He said some volunteers reported extreme effects, including blurred vision, numbculty in breathing, weakness ness, light-headedness, diffi- and feelings of hysteria.

Small told the congress marijuana was probably the most widely used drug in the world, with over 250 million users while routine U.S. campus use approached 35 per cent.

Romantic Old Galleons Too Common at Museum

VANCOUVER (CP) — Romantic galleons, says the assistant curator of the Vancouver Maritime Museum, are terribly common and ferociously inaccurate.

What the museum's model fleet really needs, Leonard McCann said, is some solid British Columbia coastal vessels.

The museum is beginning to get its models of the B.C. vessels. Paul Cardwell, a bespectacled Texan, is doing the work, but he is having problems obtaining original plans of locally designed and built vessels.

Mr. Cardwell, the museum's first full-time modelmaker, was hired in July.

"Over the years most of the local shipbuilders seem to have junked their plans," he said in a recent interview. "You can't make an accurate scale model if you don't know the exact contours of the hull.

"Most of the rest of it you can get from photographs, providing you have enough photographs from different angles." The same problems apply to restoration.

One particularly mucked-up model Mr. Cardwell restored was that of the tug Kildonan—one of six names the tug had when it worked the British Columbia coast.

OLD PAINTING HELPED

The model is one of Mr. Cardwell's favorites, built by a seaman with the skill of a craftsman.

"When this came to us it looked as if it had been used to pound tent stakes. I thought, 'What am I wasting my time with?' There didn't seem to be any hope for it at all.

"But as I started working on it, it began to look better and better. Fortunately the museum has an old oil painting of it, painted perhaps 50 years ago—and this showed us what colors it was."

He said he is also pleased with his restoration of the fishing boat Atlas, which dates from the start of halibut fishing in B.C. in the early 1900s.

"It was interesting work because the model was so horribly filthy it was a pleasure to get the thing out from under the crud.

"I had to replace a large amount of the rigging, because the thread had rotted away, but otherwise it was in fairly good shape."

PATIENCE NEEDED

The museum staff has compiled a preliminary list of the types of models wanted. It ranges from paddle boats, Haida canoes and sail-powered rum-runners to modern supertankers, river dredges and a stretched B.C. government ferry. He will even build a Pisces submarine and a bathtub racer, if time—and money—permit.

A good modeller, said Mr. Cardwell, must be patient and respectful of history.

"You can build something like the Cutty Sark with complete accuracy because there are so many photographs and drawings of her—and if you get absolutely stuck, you can always go to London and look at the real thing.

"But if you start doing something like the Kildonan, you have a research problem on your hands. All you have is a few photographs—and if you're lucky, an oil painting."

BOMBED WITH ROLLS

Mr. Cardwell recently spent 60 hours restoring a nine-foot model of a German transatlantic liner retrieved from a navy mess in Winnipeg.

The model of the Bremen, built in 1927-28 and sunk during the Second World War, was in pitiful shape when the museum got it.

"She looked as if she had been thoroughly bombarded with everything they could get their hands on," said Mr. Cardwell. "The story is that they bombed it with rolls.

"If that's true then I doubt if navy food has improved from Nelson's time. They must have been rather hard rolls.

"All the rigging was gone. The lifeboats were missing or damaged. Some of her decking had shrunk.

"Vast quantities of railings were lying in heaps and these scars here testify that big chunks of the hull were flaking off."

He pointed to the automotive body putty he used to patch up the hull and to the tiny ship's lifeboats he had painstakingly rebuilt.

"A well-made model is a three-dimensional, historical document.

"You can also admire—or otherwise—the techniques of craftmanship involved. Kids love them. They come here again and again to gawk at their favorites."

Is assistant curator McCann pleased? Yes, he is, especially since a model of a B.C. winder boom boat, recently completed by Mr. Cardwell, won top show prize at a modellers' competition.

ORANGE DIGITS FLASH ALCOHOL LEVEL

VANCOUVER (CP) — For one thin quarter, Vancouver area drinkers will soon be able to get their blood-alcohol level flashed out in bright orange digits.

A $3,450 breath-analysis machine, said to be more accurate than the device used by police, will be operational in 17 bars, restaurants, cocktail lounges and nightclubs in the Lower Mainland.

Kenneth Kay, president of Alco-Meter Systems International Ltd., said that his company has sold 190 of the units since its Calgary plant began production last year. He predicted 600 units will be located in Toronto, Calgary and Vancouver this year.

To operate the machine, a quarter is placed in a slot and a straw drops out through which to blow into the unit. Within seconds a reading appears on the front panel. The straw is then fed back into the machine for disposal and the machine purges the air.

Mr. Kay, 31, had been a stockbroker for six years before he decided to raise the $750,000 necessary for the venture. He said he had the idea to patent the machine for commercial use while driving his car and listening to a radio discussion on drinking drivers.

The Alberta and British Columbia liquor control boards have approved use of the units in drinking establishments and the state of California and the United States Navy are testing the device.

'Dog Squad' To Sniff Guilt

MOUNT FOREST, Ont. (CP) — Cpl. Ab Boley of the provincial police says dogs may be used some day as lie detectors to unmask criminals.

"You put a dog into a room with four or five men, one a killer, and the dog will likely pick out the guilty man just by his smell," says Cpl. Boley, head of the provincial police's 14-dog search and rescue teams. The teams are trained in this community in west-central Ontario.

Cpl. Boley has worked with University of Toronto researchers on experiments using his own dog, Kanaka II, one of the best trackers in the province.

Kanaka II was able to detect one-5000th of a part of adrenalin on one of 13 clothes pegs placed in a circle. The adrenalin, a hormone released in the body under stress, was mixed in a saline solution and dabbed on the peg. The rest of the pegs had a dab of ordinary saline solution.

A dog smelling fear on a person could direct the attention of police to the most likely suspect, Cpl. Boley says.

Nine of the police dogs, all German shepherds, selected by Cpl. Boley, also can sniff out concealed caches of drugs ranging from marijuana to heroin.

ORGANIZED DOG FIGHTING GROWING GAMBLING CRAZE

CHICAGO (NYT) — Pat Podzianowski, a construction worker by trade, is a burly, ponderous man, about 40 years old, with a great stomach.

His bare upper body, across th chest and back and the arms, is covered with tattoos.

There are two naked women spinning a spider web, a fiery serpent with a human torso in red, green and black, flaming fighting cocks and, on one shoulder, a pair of dogs, their jaws open, fighting with fangs and straining muscles.

The dogs are skillfully wrought and well drawn. They look very much like those in Podzianowski's backyard in the Chicago suburb of Tinley Park. He is a breeder of fighting dogs, Staffordshire terriers. One of an estimated 40 to 50 such breeders around the country.

They are part of a collection of men — as many as 5,000 by the best-informed estimate — who regularly meet clandestinely at locations across the country to take part in an illegal and apparently growing activity: putting one dog against another and betting on fights that last up to several hours and often leave both dogs dying or dead.

"There is no question that this has got bigger," says Duncan Wright, executive director of the American Dog Owners Association. "In the last few years it has quadrupled. Ten years ago, you wouldn't have organized rings, now you do. It's getting bigger and nobody is noticing."

The matches are held secretly not only because they are illegal under various state humane laws, but also because the fights are always accompanied by heavy betting.

Podzianowski says he has been breeding fighting dogs for 19 years. He has also raised fighting cocks. On a recent summer Saturday, however, the dogs commanded all his attention.

There are fights on this day, two of the dogs are out of his line of breeding, and he is to be the referee for the two fights.

About half of those who will attend the fights gather first at Podzianowski's home; others will join the group later. They will then travel to the site of the fight, the ex-urban community of Countryside.

Some are local men from around Chicago, others have come some distance. there is a strong contingent of Southerners, "some boys from Nashville," the only introduction that is made, all that is customary.

A few are from Texas, one is a Canadian.

For the most part, they are in their 20s and 30s, although there are a few older men.

One is a reporter, although the others do not know that.

Some matches are family affairs, men, women and children, but this meeting attracts only men.

Beer is passed around, there is reminiscence about other fights, in Texas, Mississippi, Florida, Chicago, Milwaukee, Cleveland and other places, talk of dogs with names like Raw Jaw, Tony the Tiger, Wild Woman, and Podzianowski's famous Cassius Clay, a 17-fight winner.

One lanky man recalls a recent fight in which one of the dogs was "messed up pretty bad; he passed his insides after the fight." The dog had to be killed.

This generates talk of the best way to dispose of badly-injured dogs, and some instructions from Podzianowski to a novice on how to train a puppy for fighting, develop his blood instincts and teach it to parry.

"Now, you don't want to throw a kitten in there with the puppy right away for it to kill, it'll just go crazy for more. What you want to do is get yourself one of those cats and put in in an onion bag and string it up on a rope from the top of the garage. Use a spring, you know, like a front-door screen spring, and hang that cat up there so its paws are out through the onion bag. You want to get yourself some clippers and clip the claws off."

"When you let the puppy at it, the cat'll bob up and down and the dog'll go after it. Pretty soon, the dog gets tired and sweaty and you pull it off and drag it back to the corner and hold it against the wall.

"It'll be hell to hold, but you hold it and then turn it around and — hyaaah! — you let it go back at it.

"If the cat gets pretty mauled up in the bag, just take it down and keep it till the next day and then throw it in and let the dog kill it."

According to Wright, a fighting dog in training might be "fed" a score or more of cats or younger dogs to hone its blood instincts before it is pitted against another dog.

He has been conducting an investigation into dog fighting on behalf of his association for more than two years, during which time, he reports, he attended 18 fights on an undercover basis compiling an extensive list of participants.

Although there have been some arrests for dog fighting in the last 18 months — a total of five raids in California, Oklahoma, Massachusetts and North Carolina — most fights are known only to the participants.

Even when arrests are made, fines are not high — $875 and probation in a recent Massachusetts case — and only the organizers, not the spectators are normally booked. Moreover, enforcement is difficult.

Overpass Scratched

A provincial government decision to save more than $800,000 by scrapping plans to build an overpass at the Blanshard-Finlayson intersection has the approval of the city of Victoria, Mayor Peter Pollen said Tuesday.

Pollen said the decision of Highways Minister Graham Lea has been relayed to the city traffic engineer's department and hasn't been formally discussed by city council, although the announcement comes as no real surprise.

"It is the enunciated policy of the city to retain the residential character of Finlayson and not encourage its growth as an east-west artery, so it would be in direct conflict with this policy if the provincial government went ahead with the overpass project," he said.

Lea told reporters Monday his department favors a level crossing at the Blanshard-Finlayson intersection, similar to the one at Blanshard-Hillside.

Difference in cost between an overpass with clover-leaf feeders and a light-controlled intersection has been estimated at $870,000, including construction and land acquisition costs.

Self-Serve 'Service' Catches On

VANCOUVER (CP) — "Most service stations don't give you any service anyway," said Vancouver surgeon Dr. R. M. Christensen as he put the nozzle into his car's gas tank.

"So I don't see why I shouldn't serve myself. It isn't the money aspect as much as the fact that they're not giving the service."

Vancouver drivers who feel the same way are getting their wish. In December, 1973, British Columbia had 20 self-serve gas stations. This summer the number has risen to 32, most of them in the Lower Mainland.

Customers like them because the gas costs less and the service—their own—is faster.

Dealers like them because they present fewer management problems, aside from the occasional customer who drives off without paying.

Industry managers like them because a marginal operation can be revitalized almost overnight by converting to self-serve. Gas sales volume at least doubles.

The industry expects 30 per cent of its gas will be sold in self-serves by the end of the decade.

PRICES LOWER

Self-serve prices per gallon are usually several cents below what standard stations charge. Competitive pressure among self-serves often drives the price down another cent or two.

But there's more to self-serve operation than pennies.

"Price has a lot to do with it but we have Cadillacs, Oldsmobiles, even a Rolls-Royce," said Kevin Conway, manager of one self-serve station. "We get doctors, lawyers, everybody comes in here."

Another factor is efficiency. Motorists don't want expensive car paint jobs marred by careless attendants.

The procedure is simple: Drive up, take the hose from the pump, turn the pump switch to "on," put the nozzle in your tank and squeeze the handle until you have all the gas you want. Turn the pump off and replace the handle.

The amount registers on a control panel in the station office where you pay. The usual services are available—oil, air, water, window-cleaner—only you provide them yourself.

SERVICES FEWER

John McIntyre, Shell Canada western retail sales manager said he thinks some customers feel "that the so-called traditional free services in service stations are becoming fewer."

Are they becoming fewer?

"I wouldn't want to say," said Mr. McIntyre. "It's becoming more difficult for conventional operators to provide service, let's put it that way."

Some industry people still put price as the No. 1 reason self-serves have caught on.

"We could sense or feel that the buying public was being sensitive to price in a lot of areas, not only in the price of steak, eggs and oranges, but in the price of gas," said Walter Walmsley, retail manager for Chevron Standard.

Mr. McIntyre said the trend to self-serves is a reflection of what is going on in the United States and Europe, especially Sweden, where 80 per cent of the stations are self-serve.

HOW TO WRITE A GOOD CLASSIFIED ACTION AD

1—IT'S BEST to start your ad with the name of the article or service you have to offer. If you have an apartment, room, etc., for rent, or property for sale; start your ad with the location.

2—BE CLEAR. Readers respond more quickly and favorably when given complete, definite information. Always include the price in your advertisement.

3—MAKE IT EASY for the reader-prospect to reach you. Always give your telephone number or your name and address. If you do not have regular hours, state a preferred time for the prospect to get in touch with you.

4—PLAY SAFE. You get the greatest reader attention by using consecutive insertions. A six-day order is best and costs less, and you can, of course, stop your ad as soon as you get the results you want. You pay only for the days your ad appeared. Lower yearly rates are available to those who wish to keep their services or products before the public.

5—PLACE YOURSELF in the reader's position and ask yourself what you want to know about your offer. The answer you give will make a good Want Ad.
Don't allow the reader to speculate.

6—GIVE YOUR PROSPECT every inducement you can with good copy. Classified action ad readers have the money and are already interested in buying the merchandise or service you information you give are the have to offer; the details and most important.

7—WANT ADS THAT FAIL TO bring the desired results do so usually, not through a lack of readership, but because they are poorly worded or contain inadequate information.

8—TO PLACE YOUR AD, call 386-2121, your direct line number to fast Want Ad action. A courteous, efficient advisor will be glad to help you word and place your order. And remember, Classified Action Ads afford you the most complete coverage. Telephones are open 8:30 a.m. to 6:00 p.m. for you daily Monday through Saturday call:

City Firm On Jobless

The unemployment rate in Victoria held firm at about 6 per cent in August while jumping .4 per cent to 6.5 per cent in the rest of British Columbia, according to an estimate by Stan Purdy, Victoria manager of Canada Manpower.

He said Victoria's unemployment rate has been just slightly under the provincial average and has not increased since July. The B.C. average in July was 6.1 per cent.

"We do not have precise figures on the unemployment level in this area but we are doing slightly better than the provincial average."

He said unemployment normally increases as summer goes along because young people who have not been able to find work in other Canadian provinces drift to the coast.

"It seems that half the Prairies comes here some years and a lot of young people come from Ontario."

However, this year there was a decline in the number of job-hunters from the Prairies and Ontario reaching the Victoria area.

Despite the decrease, there was a surprisingly large number of French-Canadians from Quebec looking for work in Victoria this summer.

Purdy said there continues to be a good employment situation in Victoria because of hiring by the provincial government. Secretaries, auto mechanics and construction workers are in demand at this time, along with waitresses and other workers in the service industries.

The Canadian unemployment rate rose to 5.3 per cent in August, up from 5.1 per cent in July. The number of persons eployed rose by 83,000 to 9.2 million but the number of job-hunters also increased.

The unemployment rate is highest in the 14 to 24 age group at 9.4 per cent. The jobless rate for persons 25 and over is 3.8 per cent.

Newfoundland has the highest unemployment rate at 17.6 per cent. The jobless rate in Quebec is 6.8 per cent and in Ontario 4.4 per cent.

Mayor Dent Testifies Bribe Hinted

EDMONTON (CP) — Mayor Ivor Dent said Tuesday he was told last fall that "an excellent job" might be waiting for him after his term ended if he softened his attitude towards two city developers.

The developers he named, Raphael and Eskandra Ghermezian, are central figures in a judicial inquiry into allegations of wrongdoing at city hall. Ald. Alex Fallow has said they offered him a $40,000 "gift" in appreciation for his vote at city council in favor of a rezoning for a shopping centre the Ghermezians were developing.

The Ghermezian brothers testified that Ald. Fallow himself sought the money from them but was refused.

Mayor Dent told the inquiry he met on Oct. 2 last year with city contractor Norman Nilson.

The mayor testified that Nilson told him the Ghermezian brothers had suggested "that if I were easier on them in my attitude on city council it would be possible there would be an excellent job available for me after I was finished as mayor."

Mayor Dent said he told Nilson "that I was not particularly interested in money or making money and I said I would rather drop the conversation."

"He said 'I think they are stupid in thinking they could do business in this way'," the mayor said of Nilson's reaction.

The mayor testified that immediately after the session with Nilson he called a meeting of the city's commission board and told them about the offer, naming the Ghermezians.

"I said to them that I wish that in dealings that staff members had with the Ghermezians, they be extremely careful. I remember I was quite upset. I said to them this may be a feeler for a bribe."

In other testimony Tuesday, the son of Ald. Bill McLean denied that he attempted to use his father's influence to obtain restaurant concessions from the Ghermezian brothers.

Doug McLean, 22, told the inquiry under Mr. Justice William Morrow of the Supreme Court of the Northwest Territories of a series of meetings he had last year with the Germezian brothers to discuss various business propositions.

McLean said on Sept. 26 he visited the Ghermezians, to ask for the restaurant concessions in the Westgate Shopping Centre, subject of the rezoning mentioned in earlier testimony.

In previous testimony, Raphael Ghermezian testified that McLean told him that if the Ghermezians wanted "my old man's support" on their shopping centre proposal, they would have to give him concessions.

7 Years for Hash

EDMONTON (CP) — A resident of Warrington, England, was given a seven-year prison term after he admitted importing about 60 pounds of hashish into Canada.

Francis Alexander Beker pleaded guilty before provincial judge Carl Rolf to a charge of importing the drug into the country.

Busing Solution

FRANCIS, Sask. (CP) — The Regina East school unit has agreed to bus students from here to Weyburn, as a continuing dispute between parents in the community and the Regina East school unit continues.

About 20 families in the Francis area are waging a court battle to keep Francis out of the Regina East unit.

For the last two years, students in Francis have been taking instruction in a church basement in the community as parents refused to have them transported to Seddley, about eight miles east of Francis.

If amalgamation took place, students in Grade Seven through 12 would have to go to Seddley.

Fire Compensation

WINNIPEG (CP) — The Manitoba Criminal Injuries Compensation Board has awarded payments ranging from $180 to about $2,000 to 12 persons injured in a January apartment fire that took nine lives.

A board spokesman said the awards were made at the same rate as the Workmen's Compensation Board — 75 per cent of lost earnings or of the minimum wage during the time of disability.

School Lunch Plan

EDMONTON (CP) — A provincial government program under which nutritional food is distributed free in schools has won overwhelming approval from parents, students and teachers, and will be run again this year on a larger scale.

Teachers reported that the program led to improved school attendance, increased attention span and fewer behavior problems. The project was launched in 1973-74 with a budget of about $34,700, and involved about 1,000 students in eight Edmonton elementary schools.

Food, Water, Care Keeps Fuchsias Going

Fuchsias in baskets, tubs and planters continue blooming through early fall, proving that once they reach the flowering stage, cool weather is no hardship for them.

Even the hardy herbaceous species Fuchsia magellanica variety riccartonii is at its production peak just now. For ease of cultivation and quantity of brightly colored flowers, plus the fresh green of small leaves all summer, this fuchsia is hard to beat.

Those in baskets need more care, yet it all boils down to supplying moisture to the roots for enough nutrients to be taken up into the stems to keep buds and flowers continually coming.

Most people say they water hanging baskets every day but how much water remains in the soil?

As an estimate, a 10-inch basket would need three pints of water daily when the plants are in full growth. If the whole amount was retained by the soil and transmitted to the plant together with soil nutrients in solution, the plant continues thriving just as long as the frost and cold weather holds off. But we hear of leaves drying and buds falling long before the end of the season.

It is not easy to water a basket plant. For one thing, it is often hanging almost out of reach. It is usually too heavy to unhook for taking down frequently and the roots of the plants have filled the basket to overflowing, allowing little space for pouring on of water.

★ ★ ★

One remedy is to fix a pan to the bottom of the basket to act as a storage cistern for water. The seepage will drain into the pan for later absorption into the soil.

A metal or plastic bowl or pan can be drilled in three places on the rim for attaching by wires to the basket.

When fuchsias are hanging from trees or patio rafters, watering is not much of a problem. Splashing and running through to the surroundings does no harm, and the gardener can take the hose twice daily to saturate the soil content.

With all this watering there must be nutrients supplied. A weak solution of a seaweed fertilizer, as alginure, given twice weekly after flowering commences in summer is of great benefit.

Personally I have used it as often as alternate days for fuchsias in hanging baskets with excellent results. For this frequent application the solution must be weak and a pan or bowl attached beneath the basket to prevent loss to the plants below in a border.

The hardy border fuchsia mentioned at the beginning of this column also needs ample watering now, and one liquid feed to maintain production of flowers. When flowering finally is curtailed by cool weather, perhaps by Thanksgiving, do not cut down this hardy shrub. Leave the branches until next April before pruning them to six inches above soil level.

Fuchsias in baskets are more difficult to handle in winter, particularly for apartment balcony gardeners. Suggestions will appear later as needed.

SOLUTION THURSDAY

The Bridge Expert

By FRED KARPIN

It will become perfectly obvious, after observing East's play at trick one in today's deal, that he did the wrong. But the question is WHY his play was wrong. As a bridge detective, it is your job to find the reason that will convict East of "conduct unbecoming a good bridge player." East-West vulnerable. North deals.

East-West vulnerable.
North deals.

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
1 ♦	Pass	2 NT	Pass
3 NT	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Five of ♠.

It should be stated that South's response of two notrump was a horrendous call. But, as frequently happens, "evil" triumphed over "good."

On West's opening lead of the spade five, the eight was played from dummy, and East agonized for about a minute trying to figure out whether to put up the ten or the king.

If West were leading away from the jack (say, J-x-x-x-x), then the play of the ten would force South's ace; and all South could then make in spades would be the ace. But if East played the king, to be taken by South's (presumed) ace, then dummy's queen of spades would be promoted into a second spade winner for declarer.

Finally East decided to play the ten, on the assumption that South had the ace (based on South's direct jump to two notrump). South made haste to win the trick with his jack. He then exposed his hand and claimed the contract with an overtrick.

It is evident that if East had put up the spade king, the defenders would have been enroute to cashing five spade tricks. Had East thought the situation through, he would have put up the king. But this required looking at the set-up through the eyes of the declarer.

Suppose you were the declarer, and had held in your hand either the A-x or the A-x-x of spades. What would you have played from dummy at trick one? Would it have been the eight-spot (as was done), or would it have been the queen, in the 50-50 hope that West's opening lead had been away from the king? Surely ever ydeclarer in the world, finding himself in the above-described— position, would have put up the board's queen.

Hence, did not declarer's play of the eight-spot from dummy at trick one indicate that HE DID NOT POSSESS THE ACE?.

Lawson Wins Libel Case —He's Not Hoffa Flunky

VANCOUVER (CP) — Senator Ed Lawson was awarded libel damages of $10,000 Tuesday against fellow union leader Jess Succamore for statements made on a radio open line show in October, 1972.

The senator, president of the Teamsters joint council, sued the national secretary of the Industrial Mechanical and Allied Workers Association for alleging on the show that Lawson had to get approval from international Teamster president James Hoffa to accept his Senate appointment.

Hoffa was in prison for jury tampering when the show was aired over Vancouver radio station CJOR. Senator Lawson also brought action against the station and show moderator Pat Burns and obtained an out-of-court settlement before the Succamore case was tried in January.

In his decision, Mr. Justice J. S. Aikins of the British Columbia Supreme Court rejected the defence of Succamore who pleaded fair comment. The judge also said there had been no apology from the defendant.

The judge said he found the sting of the libel lay in the imputation that Hoffa, as head of the Teamsters Union and in jail for crimes, was the person who permitted Lawson to accept the Senate appointment.

"I find that the plaintiff did not need any approval to accept the appointment to the senate from the Teamsters international headquarters in the United States, that he did not think that he required any such approval and that he did not get any such approval," Mr. Justice Aikins said in his 26-page judgment.

The judge said Succamore produced no evidence to show that Hoffa entered into the matter in any way.

He said Senator Lawson contacted the international headquarters because his B.C. colleagues thought he should consider the Senate appointment seriously.

As a result of the contact, the international headquarters allocated funds to pay additional office staff to assist Senator Lawson in the performance of his union duties as well as accept the Senate appointment.

$2M Theft Charged Banker

TORONTO (UPI) — A bank manager and a businessman charged in connection with the theft of over $2 million from the Bank of Montreal Tuesday had their bail set at a total of $130,000 and were remanded until Sept. 18.

Judge Crawford Guest set bail at $80,000 for Eric Waddilove, a 33-year-old Bank of Montreal branch manager who came to Canada from Scotland four years ago.

Bail was set at $50,000 for Desmond Steel, 48, described as a Toronto real estate broker involved in buying and selling mortgages.

Bank of Montreal inspectors discovered discrepancies in the records of the bank's suburban Heron's Hill branch Aug. 8 during a routine inspection. Waddilove was appointed manager of the branch two years ago and held that position until recently.

Fraud squad officers were called in and, after investigating the branch's records over the last 18 months, arrested Waddilove and Steel.

Police described the fraud as involving small loans, none more than $7,500 — to one man and to 41 companies he directed. The majority of these companies were described as "paper" but some were legitimate.

Baby Lucky Out of Trash

DECATUR, Ga. — Police and juvenile court switchboards were deluged with calls Tuesday from persons wanting to adopt "Lucky," a baby found Monday in a garbage compactor truck.

The eight-pound, four-ounce boy is "doing splendidly," a hospital spokesmen said.

The infant was dug out of a pile of coffee grounds and potato peelings seconds before sanitation workers started the mechanism which would have crushed his tiny body. Two employees heard his whimpering and found the child. Hospital employees later decided "Lucky" was an appropriate name.

Police identified the mother as a 15-year-old high school girl. They said she called her mother from school Monday saying she was sick and needed to be picked up.

The girl's mother told police she did not suspect her daughter was pregnant.

Authorities had not yet decided whether charges are to be brought in the case.

LONDON — After stuntman Evel Knievel and his rocket-powered sky-cycle comes Englishman Walter Cornelius and his big rubber catapult.

Walter, 54, appealed for 20 strong men to haul back on huge strands of rubber being specially made for an attempt to hurl him 50 yards across the River Nene at Peterborough, in the English Midlands, next month.

Four years ago he tried to fly across the Nene on a pair of "batman" wings, but he fell in.

The Duke Brawls Again—In London

LONDON (Reuter) — Every film fan knows the scene: A bar explodes into violence and in the thick of it is John Wayne.

This time the bar is not in the old West. It is a London pub. Wayne, now 66, with 45 years in the business and about 150 films behind him, is making his first film in England.

It is called Brannigan. Wayne plays the part of a tough lieutenant of that name in the Chicago police department who comes to London searching for an extortionist and a drug smuggler.

Co-stars are Richard Attenborough, the British actor-director, who plays a suave Scotland Yard chief, and Mel Ferrer, a crooked lawyer.

Why has it taken Wayne so long to make a picture here!

The answer comes in the familiar drawl: "Simple. I have never had a story that requires working in this area. The average film made here would not be the type they would put me in. I make films by personal story and we have never had a personal story that would fit here before.

"What I look for is a story which a kid of 10 and a guy of 50 can identify with. That is why I like westerns, because they are folklore and every country understands every other country's folklore."

When it was known that Wayne was coming to London to make a picture every stunt man in Britain volunteered to work with him.

Explains Peter Brayham, the picture's stunt and fight arranger and one of the top such professionals in Britain: "We don't think of him as an actor. We consider him a stunt man who can act.

"I don't have to choreograph every scene. These punches that we use in the film he invented. We have tried in the past to get directors here to use them but we were over-ruled. Now it is fantastic to be working with the master."

No one has dared become over-familiar with Wayne. Mostly he is Mr. Wayne. To a few he is J. W. And only the English director, Douglas Hickox calls him Duke.

Stepping from the pub brawl to his trailer on the lot at Shepperton Studios, where most of the film is being shot, Wayne complained about a pain in his left arm.

The cause: Throwing a massive punch and pulling up short before it lands on somebody's jaw.

"It wouldn't hurt if I let it land. Why don't I?

"And have everyone call me a bully? Or worse, have all these fine stunt men take me apart? No sir-ee."

After this film he is scheduled to make a sequel to True Grit, in which his performance as the one-eyed marshal gained him his only Oscar.

"They have a basic story and are working on the script," he said.

His co-star will be Katharine Hepburn.

"All I know at the moment is that I am after some bad guys after her brother's mission has been burned down."

Wayne said that when he look at the films being made now he sometimes gets depressed.

"The industry has lost its flair, imagination and illusion. Now they are trying to shock you with realism and what they are actually doing is just getting vulgar and in bad taste."

NEW EGG SELLING AGENCY SOUGHT

OTTAWA (CP) — The National Anti-Poverty Organization, a pressure group for the poor, has called for a new marketing agency for eggs.

In a news release, the organization said the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency "itself is a rotten egg laid in Canada and should be buried."

The deliberate destruction of millions of eggs by the marketing agency was a "completely irresponsible act" at a time when a third of all Canadians were preparing for a "bleak winter."

The agency has buried millions of eggs which rotted in improper storage. The eggs had been purchased by the agency as surplus in an effort to keep domestic egg prices from slipping.

The poverty organization said it commends recently-appointed Consumer Affairs Minister Andre Ouellet and Beryl Plumptre, chairman of the food prices review board, for criticizing the actions of the agency.

PERVERSE PARROT CRACKS UP COURT

LONDON (UPI) — Polly the parrot was exhibit No. 1 and the star witness in court Tuesday. He wasn't very polite.

Judges asked Fred Squires to talk to the red-and-green Amazon parrot to prove it was really his. Squires claimed the bird was stolen from his home and said he found it later in possession of a bird dealer, who was charged with theft.

Squires asked, "Who's a pretty boy?"

The parrot barked like a dog, then said, "He's lovely. Scratch my back."

Then, as court officials broke up in laughter, the bird said, "I'll spit in your eye. What's the matter?"

The judges said this was proof enough the bird belonged to Squires — especially when the accused bird dealer, Alan Sattaur, could only get polly to cluck a few times.

Sattaur and an associate were fined.

Farmer Probes Why Small Farms Fail

McLaughlin sits on tractor

By MARK PEDERSEN

FOUR FALLS, N.B. (CP) — Darrell McLaughlin spends roughly 14 hours a day in his family's gently-rolling potato and grain fields but still finds time to talk about the problems driving small farms out of business in New Brunswick.

The 24-year-old graduate of Nova Scotia Agricultural College is chairman of a farmer-sponsored inquiry which plans to look closely at those problems in the next two years.

"What we have to do is muster up a counterforce in society," he said. "The consumers and the farmers have to get together. I hope through this inquiry one can benefit the other and put pressure on the government to correct the injustices that are taking place."

He listed among these injustices a government tendency to help corporate farms and processors more than small farm operators, skyrocketing prices for agricultural land and the stiff markup on food before it reaches the consumer.

PLANS IMPROVEMENTS

Agriculture Minister George Horton said his department plans to improve communication between the department and farmers.

He also said consumers should back the farmers if they want them to supply a larger share of local markets.

Higher costs, low returns and long hours are driving farmers off the land in New Brunswick, a province where forests predominate and only a small percentage of the land has ever been successfully cultivated.

The number of farms in the province decreased 37 per cent between 1966 and 1971, dropping to 5,485.

Land under cultivation fell to 1.3 million acres from 1.8 million, a 26-per-cent decrease which indicates some of the land is being incorporated into larger farm operations.

The provincial government is concentrating on the search for lucrative, secondary industry. But there still are some, Darrell McLaughlin among them, who want to stick with the land.

PROBLEMS NOT NEW

"If I was to go to any other industry," he explained, "I would have to tell my son to do as I say and not what I do. But here on the farm I can pretty well say, 'do as I do.'."

An 85-year-old farmer who attended the commission's first public hearing at Fredericton this spring told the organizers, including members of both the National Farmers Union and the New Brunswick Federation of Agriculture, they were doing 'a great job' but were more than 50 years too late.

The young commission chairman agreed the problems of high costs and low net returns have been around for years.

"But what frightened us was that two or three years ago in Canada, we were dumping wheat, we were dumping potatoes, we were dumping milk. At the same time, people in underdeveloped countries were starving.

"Farmers were offering to give their crops away. Out west, they offered their wheat to ship to an underdeveloped country but the mills wouldn't process it.

"We feel it is our God-given right to produce as much food as possible, especially since people are starving to death.

"In the last two years, we haven't been in a surplus position and farmers have been going out maybe a little bit faster. This has caused us great concern because as farmers go out, there is a corporate structure developing."

SMALL FARMS VITAL

He said the small farm is an indispensable part of the food-producing process, mainly because of a productive yield which comes with pride and personal initiative.

"A corporation is faced with people who are just working for the daily wage and have only a limited amount of interest in the production."

Mr. Laughlin said farmers are getting more for the food they are producing but costs are escalating rapidly at the same time. Land prices are also climbing quickly.

He said the agriculture department should make sure all farmers have an equal chance to benefit from new programs and assistance.

"If a policy is passed, they don't explain it enough so the farmer can benefit. There are just a select few who get in the know."

He said farmers should participate in the policy-making process. "I am not ignorant enough to think they aren't sincere people in the department of agriculture at Fredericton. But when it comes to policy making, nobody understands farming like the farmers."

He would also like to see governments crack down on food futures exchanges which allow speculators to make paper profits.

"You find the producer or the consumer will pay for that middleman."

Governments should also prevent food companies from forming monopolies to control prices.

91st YEAR, No. 78 ★★★ VICTORIA, B.C., WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 11, 1974 15 CENTS DAILY, 20 CENTS SATURDAY

ST. JOHN'S Nfld. (CP) — Joseph R. Smallwood, the man who led Newfoundland into Confederation, said today he wants to become premier again.

Smallwood, 73, who retired from politics in 1972 after his first election defeat in 22 years as premier, announced he would seek the leadership of the Liberal party at a convention here Oct. 25-26.

"I am convinced that if the Liberal convention in October truly reflects the feeling of the Newfoundland people, then I will be chosen to lead the campaign against the present government in the next general election," Smallwood told a news conference.

The only other declared candidate for the leadership is Ed Roberts, chosen party chief following Smallwood's retirement from politics in February, 1972.

Smallwood resigned his Liberal government in January, 1972, after a series of recounts and court hearings showed the Progressive Conservatives were the victors in an October, 1971 election.

Premier Moores' party defeated the Liberals in a subsequent election in March, 1972. Standing in the 42-seat house now is Conservative 32, Liberal eight, New Labrador Party one and vacant one.

Food Price Index Up 14.3% in Year

Times News Services

OTTAWA — Food prices in August were 14.3 per cent higher than a year ago, Statistics Canada reported today in the latest consumer price index.

The index was 10.8 per cent higher than in August, 1967, and one per cent higher than July, with housing prices coming a close second to food in boosting the index.

House prices, coupled with record mortgage levels and increased repair costs pushed the housing index up 9.4 per cent above last August.

Rents contributed a relatively small amount to the August rise, up only three-tenths of one per cent in the month.

A nine-tenths of one per cent average increase in new car prices accounted for most of the rise in the transportation index, up six-tenths of one per cent in August and 10.5 per cent in the 12-month period.

The all-items index for August was at 169.6. Stated another way the mix of consumer items which could be bought for $100 in 1961 cost $169.90 in August, $168.00 in July and $153.000 in August, 1973.

The consumer price index is based on a 1967 survey of family spending patterns and weights of major component indexes are: Food, 25 per cent; housing, 31 per cent; clothing, 11 per cent; transportation, 15 per cent; and other items 18 per cent.

Most food items for home consumption increased in price in August. An exception was fresh vegetables which normally drop in price in late summer but this year's decline of 18.4 per cent between July and August was more than normal. Hamburger also declined in price for the sixth consecutive month despite increases in cost of other types of beef.

Pork prices rose 8.8 per cent in August, beef prices 4.2 per cent and fresh fruit 3.5 per cent. Sugar prices were up 12.6 per cent to a level 160 per cent above that of a year earlier.

During the year the index for restaurant meals went up by 20.2 per cent and for food eaten at homee 13.2 per cent.

The clothing index rose by five-tenths of one per cent to a level 10.8 per cent above last August. There was a general advance in clothing prices last month.

Index Ups Pensions

OTTAWA (CP) — Basic old age pensions will increase to $117.02 a month in October, Welfare Minister Marc Lalonde announced Tuesday.

The increase, the fourth quarterly escalation for pensions and income supplements this year, is designed to help keep pension payments in line with the rising cost of living.

Under an indexing formula, the basic pension will rise to $117.02 from $112.95. The maximum guaranteed income supplement for a single person or married person whose spouse is not a pensioner will rise to $82.08 from $79.23. Together with the basic pension this will mean a maximum monthly total of $199.10.

The maximum supplement for a married couple if both are pensioners will increase to $72.89 each from $70.36.

Family allowances will also increase by $1.76 on the basic $20. This is a preliminary figure and because the adjustment is made on an annual basis the indicated increase accounts only for price index increases during a nine-month period ended in July.

MURDER SKETCHES PREPARED

Artist's drawings of two possible witnesses to the double murder in Esquimalt will be circulated throughout the province today.

Esquimalt Police Chief Art Burton said police were successful in locating two informants today, and based on their information a police artist is drawing portraits which will be circulated on reward posters and to police departments throughout B.C.

He said the two people wanted for questioning by police were reported to have been in the vicinity of Ray's Food Market, 1325 Esquimalt, around the time of the murders.

The chief also said "general public response has been good" as far as leads are concerned, particularly since a reward of $5,000 has been offered for information leading to the conviction of Esquimalt's double murderer.

Mass Pardon Out —Ford

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Ford said today he will review individual requests for clemency from Watergate defendants, but is not considering the possibility of blanket pardon which his aides announced just 24 hours earlier.

Ford's statement was read to reporters by Senate Republican leader Hugh Scott following a one-hour, 45-minute meeting between the president and congressional leaders.

It directly contradicted a highly controversial announcement by deputy press secretary Jack W. Hushen Tuesday that Ford had the idea of a mass pardon "under study."

There is "no study going on," Scott said, apparently paraphrasing the president's own words.

Ford's brief statement said Hushen's announcement was prompted by questions about a plea for clemency from the wife of John W. Dean III, the former White House counsel who was jailed last week for his part in the Watergate cover-up.

The president did not dispute Hushen's claim that he had been authorized to announce the possibility of a blanket pardon. But the statement said that any study of clemency will be made only on individual requests from Watergate defendants.

The issue of pardons for Watergate has sent more waves of criticism crashing over the White House Tuesday.

Senator Sam Ervin (Dem. N.C.) chairman of the Senate Watergate committee, said: "I can't imagine that he (Ford) could possibly make such a mockery of the principle of equal justice under law by pardoning these men who undertook to steal from the American people their right to a free election and to undermine the process by which presidents are chosen."

Congressional reaction included these comments:

"My definition of equal justice is not restricted to those involved in Watergate and Vietnam draft dodgers," Sen. Lowell P. Weicker, R—Conn. "There's no end."

Sen. Daniel K. Inouye, D—Hawaii, asked: "Are they

Massive Raids Break Pep-Pill Smugglers

WASHINGTON (UPI) — United States and Mexican police today arrested more than 120 suspects, including several "drug millionaires," in a series of raids that one official said broke the back of illegal pep pill trafficking in the U.S.

RCMP in Vancouver also helped in the investigation.

The arrests followed an eight-month investigation in the three countries and Europe into the smuggling of more than three billion "minibennies" — small benzedrine tablets — worth about $1.6 billion into the United States annually from Mexico.

"There is no question about it. We have broken the back of the illegal amphetamine operation in this country," said Doug Chandler of the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration.

"We got a couple of people in Mexico who are described as drug millionaires — they are drug rich," said Chandler. "They have also got rich from traffic in other drugs."

Most of the 124 persons in custody at mid-morning were in the United States. In Mexico, 26 were arrested, including one Mexican national.

The DEA spokesman said he expected the arrests would total about 140.

"The operation has gone smoothly and there have been no injuries reported so far in the arrests," said Chandler, who co-ordinated the raids.

Stuart Stromfield of the DEA said raidng parties were armed with sealed indictments, opened just before they struck.

"The raw materials used to manufacture these pills are being imported illegally from Europe," from some of the "biggest chemical companies," according to Stromfeld. He declined to name the countries or the firms..

Feiffer's syndicated cartoons now appear in newspapers all around the globe and have made him a hero of the egghead and the secret dissenter.

He has also written plays which have been produced on Broadway and wrote the screenplay for the film Carnal Knowledge. The relationship between men and women is one of his favorite themes, as well as politics and social mores.

NICOSIA (UPI) — The United Nations peacekeeping force in Cyprus today lodged a protest with the government here over the killing of a Canadian soldier.

Pvt. Joseph Jean Claude Berger, 21, of Rimouski, Que., was killed by a shot in the back of the head Tuesday night while riding in a UN vehicle in the outskirts of Nicosia.

Guns Found in Cells

MONTREAL (CP) — Quebec Provincial Police said Tuesday a weekend search at Archambault Institution, in nearby Ste. Anne des Plaines, uncovered a large amount of weapons and money in prisoners' cells.

The QPP is questioning several prisoners in an effort to learn how revolvers, dynamite, gunpowder, bullets, an electric motor, an electric saw, an electric drill, money, and drugs got into the cells.

Frost Cuts Wheat

LONDON (AFP) — The world wheat harvest for 1974-75 now is expected to be less than first estimated because of frost damage in some important producing areas, the International Wheat Council says.

Oilmen Released

ADDIS ABABA (UPI) — Ethiopian guerrillas have freed three American oil company executives and a United Nations official they kidnapped six months ago and led on forced marches through rocky desert land to evade pursuers.

Ill Prisoners Freed

NICOSIA (AP) — Greek and Turkish-Cypriot leaders agreed today to free sick and wounded war prisoners as a prelude to a general release of all captives in Cyprus crisis, the United Nations said.

Greek-Cypriot President Glafkos Clerides and Turkish-Cypriot Vice-President Raouf Denktash also agreed to free all prisoners under 18 years of age and teachers and University students, says a communique from the UN peace force.

Fired O'Grady Suing ICBC

Secretary and general counsel for the Insurance Corporation of B.C. Terry O'Grady, has been fired from his post and has launched a suit against the crown corporation for wrongful dismissal and breach of contract.

O'Grady a former Victoria city solicitor, has been considered second in authority since he joined the corporation July 21, 1973.

His duties have been assumed by corporation general manager Norman Bortnick who declined to give any reason for O'Grady's dismissal.

O'Grady and his lawyer, George Murray filed the writ against ICBC Tuesday and claimed unspecified damages on the two counts.

O'Grady's ICBC salary was never disclosed but indications are he moved to Vancouver for a substantial pay increase.

His contract with Victoria was in the neighborhood of $48,000 a year.

He was 23 years in city service, being the city solicitor for the last 17 years.

O'Grady says he will not be returning to Victoria but will probably go into general practice in the Vancouver area.

When he took the ICBC appointment, O'Grady said it would give him an opportunity to help build "one of Canada's great ventures from the ground up."

$18M Loss for ICBC?

A 10 per cent loss of $18.5 million could be shown this year by Autoplan, Premier Barrett said Tuesday.

The statement made during a phone-in radio program refutes an earlier report alleged to be taken from a secret brief indicating a first-year loss of $100 million or more for the government-operated car insurance plan.

Barrett said Autoplan revenue is expected to be $185 million and he said the operating loss could amount to 10 per cent, about equal to the rate of inflation.

The premier's admission also contradicts a statement by Transport Minister Robert Strachan, who is responsible for Autoplan, in which he said the system would break even or suffer marginal loss in its first year.

Barrett said he has a statement giving figures for the first six months of operations of the Insurance Corp. of B.C. But there will be no public report until the end of the first 12 months.

100 Die in Race Violence As White Rebels Collapse

Times News Services

LISBON — More than 100 persons have been killed in street battles in the last 24 hours in Lourenco Marques following the collapse of a white settlers' rebellion, the official radio station in the Portuguese territory reported today.

The Star newspaper in Johannesburg, South Africa, quoted a senior Portuguese official as saying at least 200 persons had been killed or wounded in the widespread racial violence.

South African radio quoted refugees as saying the colony was near anarchy. A Lisbon government communique said troops were having difficulty in stopping spreading violence.

Witnesses at the South African-Mozambique border said many of the hundreds of Portuguese settlers who crossed the frontier abandoned their cars and walked to escape from roaming black gangs and roadblocks.

Just before most communications to Lourenco Marques were cut Tuesday night, a police officer told newsmen the riots in the black shantytowns were roaring out of control.

"This is another Vietnam," he said. "We don't know how to stop them."

A wealthy Italian farmer, Nick Benini, contacted Johannesburg by phone for a few minutes and said many people living outside Lourenco Marques had abandoned their homes.

In the city, he said, whites barricaded their homes. Food was running short because shops were closed and trucks with supplies were not arriving from the countryside.

A Portuguese government communique issued in Lisbon reported "racial violence" and said the army is flying reinforcements to the capital from northern Mozabique.

Blacks rampaged through sections of the city looting and burning shops, stoning cars and fighting gun battles with whites.

Beira, Mozambique's second-largest city and chief port, was reported quiet after two days of noisy demonstrations.

The Lisbon newspaper O Seculo reported that the leaders of the three-day revolt have also fled to neighboring South Africa or Rhodesia.

Army detachments were posted at key points throughout Lourenco Marques and were patrolling the black shantytowns on three sides of the city amid "intense agitation," Lisbon officials said.

Reporters said whites could travel in some sections only by armed convoy. Black smoke hung over some areas, and most businesses were closed.

Two Crashes Kill 3 Bikers

Three young motorcyclists died in two accidents Tuesday, one in Colwood, the other in Saanich.

James Edward Sigurdson, 21, of 1514 Brooke, and his brother, William Carl, 19, of the same address, died when the motorcycle they were riding on the Pat Bay highway went over an embankment in the Royal Oak area.

Saanich police said the brothers were killed instantly.

AIR CRASH KILLS 69

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (UPI) — An Eastern Air Lines DC-9 jet skimming through fog patches and heading for a landing at Charlotte's Douglas municipal airport crashed and burned today, killing 69 of the 82 persons aboard. (See picture on Page 3.)

Most of the 13 survivors were burned.

The crash occurred at 7:33 a.m. in an open field 2½ miles south of the airport.

A Federal Aviation Administration spokesman, Jack Barker, said that moments before the crash the flight had just been "handed off," or turned over to the local tower controller by radar control.

"Nothing in any conversations with the local controller or the radar controller indicated any trouble," Barker said.

Witnesses said most of those who survived were thrown free from the plane into a clump of trees.

The plane cut a 200-yard-wide swath as it came down, exploding in flames and sending debris and bodies flying in all directions.

Calvin Kenley, 20, who lives just 600 yards from the crash site, said he saw one of the survivors "just walking around in the field in a daze. He looked like he had run through a fire. Skin was just hanging all over him. It made me sick."

Walking Papers $20 Envelope

McKAY

By DON VIPOND
Times Staff

Three sisters in the "traditional" faction of the Society of the Love of Jesus last year were handed "their walking papers" — an envelope for each with $20 in it — their lawyer said Tuesday in B.C. Supreme Court.

In the subsequent seven-month "sit-in" the trio conducted at St. Mary's Priory in Langford, all the society gave them was the heating and lighting supplied the Priory building, counsel Hugh McMillan added.

He is representing the five sisters, led by Mother Cecilia Mary, who make up the so-called "traditional" faction in the internal dispute. They are suing for control of the society, run by the "modern" faction and with assets estimated at $1.5 million.

The case opened before Mr. Justice H. C. McKay Tuesday at the Law Courts and is expected to take at least two weeks. Cecil Branson is representing the society.

"And this was a Christian community?" the judge asked, after hearing how both factions hired their own security guards during the sit-in.

It was the security guards hired by the "modern" faction who handed Sisters Mary Agnes Eaton, Mary Josephine Donovan and Mary Lucy Forde the envelopes after the three had been locked from all but a basement kitchen in the Priory in March of last year, McMillan said.

He estimated the society must have paid about $20,000 for the security guards it hired through the sit-in.

The traditional faction claims there are five fudamental differences separating the two groups, said McMillan:

—the traditionalists, who still wear the black habit, hold that their work must not interfere with their religious life.

—there are differences in the way the two groups observe the divine office.

—two of the "modern" group receive and keep salaries earned as nurses, contrary to the "traditional" group's observance of poverty.

—the modern group has failed to recognize that in a community of this kind the society provides for members' needs.

—a long-standing tradition that no male be permitted to stay overnight in the Priory has been changed by the modern faction.

McMillan reviewed the history of the society, formed by Mother Cecilia in Vancouver in 1922 and later incorporated as an Anglican order of the Benedictine Sisters.

Mother Cecilia later led the society into the Roman Catholic Church and in 1942 moved to Victoria, eventually settling at 567 Goldstream where the Priory and another hospital were launched as well as a home for senior citizens.

She was mother prioress for almost 40 years, until she resigned the position in 1961 to operate an animal shelter, now located at Mill Bay.

Problems within the society began following 1961, McMillan said, when its work declined under the new prioress, moving Mother Cecilia to eventually write Rome requesting appointment of a new prioress. At its peak, the society had about 38 sisters working.

McMillan said the society was made "sort of secular" through a meeting held in August, 1965, when Sister Leonette Hoesing, now mother prioress, came from Convent of the Sacred Heart at Yankton, S.D.

Bishop Remi de Roo had told the meeting that Sister Hoesing had been appointed to head the society, but the bishop also wanted the sisters to formally elect her, McMillan said.

Mother Cecilia objected, wanting a list of eligible sisters prepared and two weeks to consider the matter, but Sister Hoesing was elected.

The following year there was a "great exodus" of the sisters from the priory operation, and the trio who eventually staged the sit-in had difficulties returning to the priory after being sent to other religious communities, McMillan said.

Leonette's re-election as prioress was opposed again in 1971 by the "traditional" faction, which walked out of the meeting when its objections were turned down. The validity of the election was subsequently tested and upheld in court.

McMillan said that on March 15, 1973, Sisters Eaton and Donovan, who were living in the priory, were confronted by Mother Julia Hunhoff, head of the Yankton congregation, in company with Sister Leonette, and told "to go their own way."

The priory doors were locked but the sisters still got in, were later joined by Sister Forde, and began their sit-in.

Earlier that month the society had bought a house on the other side of Goldstream, subsequently designated the new priory.

McMillan said the plaintiffs hold that Mother Hunhoff has no jurisdiction over them and that Sister Leonette has done one of two things — founded a new community across the road or abandoned St. Mary's.

None of the traditional sisters have been dismissed from the society, he said, and in fact believe they are the only society members in good standing.

The three sisters in the modern faction are no longer members because they have absented themselves too long and Sister Leonette never was a society member, according to McMillan.

The trial continues.

Less Bias Asked On Marina Study

By LIZ HUGHES
Times Staff

Both federal and provincial governments have been asked to hold up approval permits for the planned Saanichton Bay Marina, a department of Indian Affairs official said today.

Clarence Riach, economic development officer for the south Vancouver Island Indian Affairs district, told the Times, letters have been sent to both levels of government asking that no approval be given until additional studies are done on the impact of the marina on the Tsawout Indian Band, adjacent to the proposed marina.

"It's our feeling that the Indian interests have not really been dealt with in enough depth and we've asked that any decision be held up until we can do more research."

Riach said the department would either hire its own private consultant to do additional studies or rely on Environment Canada research.

"We feel there is a need for more neutral appraisal with more consideration for the Indians.

"We also feel the consultants who did the present studies may have been a bit biased," Riach said.

The "most studied marina in the province" ran into even stronger opposition at a five-hour meeting Tuesday night between the marina developers, consultants, Central Saanich council and the Tsawout Band.

Studies a 'Blind Facade'

"The studies are an insult and a blind facade," charged Philip Paul, director of land claims for the Union of B.C. Indian Chiefs.

"It seems our co-existence is a happy one as long as we say nothing, but we are no longer going to take that quiet approach to development," Paul said.

The 1,130-berth marina is planned by Saanichton Bay Marina Ltd., developers Bob Wright and George Wheaton who sat quietly during four hours of heavy criticism of their plans.

Two environmental studies and one social impact study have already been completed and all show no major problems in the development.

Indian Band manager Gus Underwood Jr., spoke to the meeting in Central Saanich council chambers for about three hours and criticized aspects of the marina from the pollution it would cause to the "pristine beauty" it would disturb.

Underwood charged that the interests of the Indian people on the East Saanich reserve have not been taken into account in the reports.

Both Underwood and Paul said the land the proposed marina will occupy may really belong to the Indians. They said validity of a treaty signed in 1852 giving the land to Sir James Douglas may be challenged.

Underwood said the band would retain a lawyer and fight the marina plans in court, if necessary.

It was revealed at the meeting that the Indians themselves had planned a marina for the area several years ago, "but we decided against it for the same reasons we are fighting this marina," Underwood said.

The first environmental report done by Dr. Jack Littlepage, an oceanographer, states there is "no evidence of major recreational use of the bay."

But, Underwood said, the Indians use it for fishing, swimming, hunting, shellfishing and boating.

Developer Bob Wright assured the meeting that the creek access would not be blocked by the marina and that if the water supply was short, it would be severely rationed at the marina.

Wheaton, Wright's partner, said he was sorry to see the atmosphere of "suspicion, prejudice and hostility" at the meeting.

"If we have differences we should be able to sit down and talk them out," he said.

Kevan Hull says 'It's a matter of loving them'

In Class by Himself

Kevan Hull is learning to tie shoelaces all over again this fall, at Quadra elementry school.

Hull, a former sports reporter, has become the only male kindergarten teacher in Greater Victoria School District.

Quadra has 35 kindergarten students in the mornings this year, too many for regular teacher Betty Scott to handle on her own.

So Hull, who normally teaches Grade 7, is helping her out. In the afternoons he teaches physical education.

He said today he's doing some reading up on teaching kindergarten but so far hasn't found dealing with five-year-olds too difficult.

"Mostly it's a matter of loving them," he said. "And I'm learning to tie shoelaces all over again!

He said he thinks it's good for children to have male as well as female teachers, particularly at Quadra which has a number of fatherless families.

"Children need models of both male and female adults in their school life at all levels," Hull said.

Future Uncertain —500% Tax Hike

Three Metchosin residents whose taxes on a jointly-owned piece of land rose more than 500 per cent this year, told the Assessment Appeal Board Tuesday they may not be able to keep their land if taxes remain as they are.

Bob Jones, speaking for himself, his wife Tish and Barbara Grantham, co-owners of 33 acres on Neff Road, said the taxes have thrown their budget "completely out of kilter and we have to wonder now if we can afford to keep our land."

Jones told the three-man board, chaired by Victoria lawyer Dean Wilson, that he had no intention of using the land for speculative purposes or subdivision.

"It's purely to live on," Jones said.

The three-man appeal board was appointed by the provincial government to rule on tax appeals. The board is the next step in the appeal procedure after the Court of Revision.

Jones, his wife and Grantham bought the land in 1971 for $19,000.

In 1972, they paid $68.10 in taxes; they paid $77.06 in 1973.

Their land was re-assessed this year under the Assessment Equalization Act, and their taxes "skyrocketed", Jones said, to $545.50, an increase of more than 500 per cent.

"It's high, rocky land, unsuitable for agriculture or for any kind of subdivision."

The property has neither water nor hydro services, he said.

He told the board he had started building a house on the land, but is holding it up now until he knows the outcome of the tax appeal.

"I think we are being viewed as speculators but that's just not so.

"We bought the land because it had the living room we wanted and the privacy."

Aubrey Jenkins, acting as agent for the Jones and Grantham, said he felt the actual market value of the land was about $25,300, not $55,000, the value set by the assessor.

The board will rule on the case within a month.

BCFP Lays Off 55, 15 More on Monday

British Columbia Forest Products has laid off 55 workers from its plywood mill on Gorge Road and will lay off another 15 Monday, plywood mill manager Walter Pumfrey said today.

All 70 men will hold job interviews Friday with officials of Canada Manpower in an effort to find immediate work or retraining.

They have been offered employment in other B.C. Forest Products mills in B.C. but most are expected to seek work on the Island.

The layoff was scheduled for Monday but 55 of the men had to be laid off early because of a strike of truck drivers which cut off supplies of veneer from the company's Youbou plant.

The strike was settled Tuesday, one day too late to prevent the early layoff. The 55 men would have been laid off Monday in any event.

Reason for the layoff is the declining market for wood products. However, no further layoffs are anticipated in the plywood mill in the near future. Remaining employment level after Monday will be 210 plus office help and weekend casual labor.

A layoff is being considered at the main sawmill, which employs a peak of 550 but no decision has been made on the timing.

Total number of persons laid off across B.C. in the forest industry is 8,181, according to the latest estimate by the Council of Forest Industries.

Of this total, 3,132 are on the coast, including the Victoria layoffs, and 5,049 are in the interior.

In addition, another 628 are likely to be laid off on the coast and another 450 in the interior before winter, according to the council's study. This would bring the layoff total to 9,259.

Main reason for the layoffs is the declining lumber market in the United States, the main customer for B.C.'s forest industry.

The layoff total across B.C. has increased 1,200 since Aug. 27, Gordon Draeseke, president of the council, said.

ASK THE TIMES

Q: When was the first recorded strike — outside of the one led by Lysistrata B. H.

A: Reference books do not list a precise date, although some slave revolts in ancient times might be characterized as strikes. The only firm date in one reference book concerned the United States where it was said that the earliest recorded strike occurred in 1776 among journeymen printers in New York for an increase in wages. Unions did not become numerous in Britain until the 18th century although there were occasional journeymen's combinations in the 16th and 17th centuries. Lysistrata, a character in the Greek comedy by Aristophanes, after the men failed to bring war to an end, organized the women "by obliging the men to continence." Finally, peace was made and a banquet held "each man with his wife."

Price Surge in Anti-Freeze Squeeze

By AB KENT
Times Staff

Victoria area motorists soon will be playing anti-freeze roulette at service stations and auto supply stores.

A Times survey today showed prices this season range from a low of $4.95 a gallon for a few lucky customers to a staggering $11.

A so-called shortage of winter engine coolant in B.C. and some other parts of Canada has more than doubled last year's prices in many cases locally, with the average retail cost this week hovering at $8.75.

But there are indications the shortage, which began to develop last season as a side effect of the U.S. fuel crisis, may be somewhat artificial this winter.

Some Victoria dealers have been offered virtually unlimited stocks of anti-freeze, but at an exhorbitant wholesale price.

A survey of 12 outlets shows few, if any, have taken up the offer which comes from an independent supplier claiming to have 100,000 gallons of anti-freeze for which he is asking between $7 and $8.50 a gallon.

Coupled with the fact that normal stocks of house brand anti-freeze to major oil company outlets have been slow in coming, the popular notion of a shortage is keeping prices up.

Half the dealers questioned expect stocks to be adequate or normal this season. The others were either unsure of what they would be getting in or are persuaded the shortage is real and that stocks will be marginal.

All but one of the dealers surveyed have anti-freeze in stock and one Texaco dealer was still selling to regulars at the old price of $4.95 until last year's stock is exhausted.

Brian Holley Motors Ltd., which sold anti-freeze last year for $4.50 a gallon, expects to have "enough for our own customers" this season at $11 a gallon. But if freezing weather hits "it'll go like candy."

Oil company representatives told Holley Motors dealers may have 75 per cent of anti-freeze stock they carried last year. That assurance and the fact there was "quite a bit left over" from the old stock should allow for adequate supplies.

Douglas Shell, on the other hand, has been led to believe there will be "about a three-year shortage" of anti-freeze. They will sell the house brand for between $8 and $9 when the shipment arrives and meanwhile offer another brand at $9.85 retail.

There is no concern about stocks at Colwood Home, nor at Trans-Canada Texaco, which raised its 1973 price of $4.95 to $8.50 a gallon installed this year.

Woolco last year sold anti-freeze for less than $3 a gallon. This year they are limiting customers to two gallons each at $6.88. Size of their stock was withheld.

Woodward's is nearly out of stock but normal quantities are expected and will sell at $7.98 a gallon, up from $3.79. Sales are limited to four gallons a customer.

Unlike previous years, Woodward's will not have a house brand because it gave the store a "bad name" last year when anti-freeze bootleggers bought cheaply in B.C. and resold at inflated prices in Alberta using the Woodward's label.

At Simpsons-Sears anti-freeze stock is depleted and supplies are "harder than hell to buy right now." The station has been told manufacturers are holding stocks which last year retailed for $3.99-$4.99 a gallon and would be releasing part-orders.

Meanwhile, Simpsons-Sears has rejected an offer of $7 wholesale antifreeze, which would have had to be retailed at $13 a gallon.

The Duke Brawls Again—In London

LONDON (Reuter) — Every film fan knows the scene: A bar explodes into violence and in the thick of it is John Wayne.

This time the bar is not in the old West. It is a London pub. Wayne, now 66, with 45 years in the business and about 150 films behind him, is making his first film in England.

It is called Brannigan. Wayne plays the part of a tough lieutenant of that name in the Chicago police department who comes to London searching for an extortionist and a drug smuggler.

Co-stars are Richard Attenborough, the British actor-director, who plays a suave Scotland Yard chief, and Mel Ferrer, a crooked lawyer.

Why has it taken Wayne so long to make a picture here?

The answer comes in the familiar drawl: "Simple. I have never had a story that requires working in this area. The average film made here would not be the type they would put me in. I make films by personal story and we have never had a personal story that would fit here before.

"What I look for is a story which a kid of 10 and a guy of 50 can identify with. That is why I like westerns, because they are folklore and every country understands every other country's folklore."

When it was known that Wayne was coming to London to make a picture every stunt man in Britain volunteered to work with him.

Explains Peter Brayham, the picture's stunt and fight arranger and one of the top such professionals in Britain: "We don't think of him as an actor. We consider him a stunt man who can act.

"I don't have to choreograph every scene. These punches that we use in the film he invented. We have tried in the past to get directors here to use them but we were over-ruled. Now it is fantastic to be working with the master."

No one has dared become over-familiar with Wayne. Mostly he is Mr. Wayne. To a few he is J. W. And only the English director, Douglas Hickox calls him Duke.

Stepping from the pub brawl to his trailer on the lot at Shepperton Studios, where most of the film is being shot, Wayne complained about a pain in his left arm.

The cause: Throwing a massive punch and pulling up short before it lands on somebody's jaw.

"It wouldn't hurt if I let it land. Why don't I?

"And have everyone call me a bully? Or worse, have all these fine stunt men take me apart? No sir-ee."

After this film he is scheduled to make a sequel to True Grit, in which his performance as the one-eyed marshal gained him his only Oscar.

"They have a basic story and are working on the script," he said.

His co-star will be Katharine Hepburn.

"All I know at the moment is that I am after some bad guys after her brother's mission has been burned down."

Wayne said that when he look at the films being made now he sometimes gets depressed.

"The industry has lost its flair, imagination and illusion. Now they are trying to shock you with realism and what they are actually doing is just getting vulgar and in bad taste."

NEW EGG SELLING AGENCY SOUGHT

OTTAWA (CP) — The National Anti-Poverty Organization, a pressure group for the poor, has called for a new marketing agency for eggs.

In a news release, the organization said the Canadian Egg Marketing Agency "itself is a rotten egg laid in Canada and should be buried."

The deliberate destruction of millions of eggs by the marketing agency was a "completely irresponsible act" at a time when a third of all Canadians were preparing for a "bleak winter."

The agency has buried millions of eggs, which rotted in improper storage. The eggs had been purchased by the agency as surplus in an effort to keep domestic egg prices from slipping.

The poverty organization said it commends recently-appointed Consumer Affairs Minister Andre Ouellet and Beryl Plumptre, chairman of the food prices review board, for criticizing the actions of the agency.

PERVERSE PARROT CRACKS UP COURT

LONDON (UPI) — Polly the parrot was exhibit No. 1 and the star witness in court Tuesday. He wasn't very polite.

Judges asked Fred Squires to talk to the red-and-green Amazon parrot to prove it was really his. Squires claimed the bird was stolen from his home and said he found it later in possession of a bird dealer, who was charged with theft.

Squires asked, "Who's a pretty boy?"

The parrot barked like a dog, then said, "He's lovely. Scratch my back."

Then, as court officials broke up in laughter, the bird said, "I'll spit in your eye. What's the matter?"

The judges said this was proof enough the bird belonged to Squires — especially when the accused bird dealer, Alan Sattaur, could only get polly to cluck a few times.

Sattaur and [illegible] associate were fined.

91st YEAR, No. 78 ★ VICTORIA, B.C., WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 11, 1974 15 CENTS DAILY, 20 CENTS SATURDAY

Joey To Try Rerun

ST. JOHN'S Nfld. (CP) Joseph R. Smallwood, the man who led Newfoundland into Confederation, said today he wants to become premier again.

Smallwood, 73, who retired from politics in 1972 after his first election defeat in 22 years as premier, announced he would seek the leadership of the Liberal party at a convention here Oct. 25-26.

"I am convinced that if the Liberal convention in October truly reflects the feeling of the Newfoundland people, then I will be chosen to lead the campaign against the present government in the next general election," Smallwood told a news conference.

The only other declared candidate for the leadership is Ed Roberts, chosen party chief following Smallwood's retirement from politics in February, 1972.

Smallwood resigned his Liberal government in January, 1972, after a series of recounts and court hearings showed the Progressive Conservatives were the victors in an October, 1971 election.

Premier Moores' party defeated the Liberals in a subsequent election in March, 1972. Standing in the 42-seat house now is Conservative 32, Liberal eight, New Labrador Party one and vacant one.

Food Price Index Up 14.3% in Year

Times News Services

OTTAWA — Food prices in August were 14.3 per cent higher than a year ago, Statistics Canada reported today in the latest consumer price index.

The whole index was 108 per cent higher than August last year, and one per cent higher than July, with housing prices coming a close second to food in boosting the index.

House prices, coupled with record mortgage levels and increased repair costs pushed the housing index up 9.4 per cent above last August.

Rents contributed a relatively small amount to the August rise, up only three-tenths of one per cent in the month.

A nine-tenths of one per cent average increase in new car prices accounted for most of the rise in the transportation index, up six-tenths of one per cent in August and 10.5 per cent in the 12-month period.

The all-items index for August was at 169.6. Stated another way the mix of consumer items which could be bought for $100 in 1961 cost $169.90 in August, $168.00 in July and $153.00 in August, 1973.

The consumer price index is based on a 1967 survey of family spending patterns and weights of major component indexes are: Food, 25 per cent; housing, 31 per cent; clothing, 11 per cent; transportation, 15 per cent; and other items 18 per cent.

Most food items for home consumption increased in price in August. An exception was fresh vegetables which normally drop in price in late summer but this year's decline of 18.4 per cent between July and August was more than normal. Hamburger also declined in price for the sixth consecutive month despite increases in cost of other types of beef.

Pork prices rose 8.8 per cent in August, beef prices 4.2 per cent and fresh fruit 3.5 per cent. Sugar prices were up 12.6 per cent to a level 160 per cent above that of a year earlier.

During the year the index for restaurant meals went up by 20.2 per cent and for food eaten at home 13.2 per cent.

The clothing index rose by five-tenths of one per cent to a level 10.8 per cent above last August. There was a general advance in clothing prices last month.

Index Ups Pensions

OTTAWA (CP) — Basic old age pensions will increase to $117.02 a month in October, Welfare Minister Marc Lalonde announced Tuesday.

The increase, the fourth quarterly escalation for pensions and income supplements this year, is designed to help keep pension payments in line with the rising cost of living.

Under an indexing formula, the basic pension will rise to $117.02 from $112.95. The maximum guaranteed income supplement for a single person or married person whose spouse is not a pensioner will rise to $82.08 from $79.23. Together with the basic pension this will mean a maximum monthly total of $199.10.

The maximum supplement for a married couple if both are pensioners will increase to $72.89 each from $70.36.

Family allowances will also increase by $1.76 on the basic $20. This is a preliminary figure and because the adjustment is made on an annual basis the indicated increase accounts only for price index increases during a nine-month period ended in July.

MURDER SKETCHES PREPARED

Artist's drawings of two possible witnesses to the double murder in Esquimalt will be circulated throughout the province today.

Esquimalt Police Chief Art Burton said police were successful in locating two informants today, and based on their information a police artist is drawing portraits which will be circulated on reward posters and to police departments throughout B.C.

He said the two people wanted for questioning by police were reported to have been in the vicinity of Ray's Food Market, 1325 Esquimalt, around the time of the murders.

The chief also said "general public response has been good" as far as leads are concerned, particularly since a reward of $5,000 has been offered for information leading to the conviction of Esquimalt's double murderer.

Mass Pardon Out —Ford

WASHINGTON (UPI) President Ford said today he will review individual requests for clemency from Watergate defendants, but is not considering the possibility of blanket pardon which his aides announced just 24 hours earlier.

Ford's statement was read to reporters by Senate Republican leader Hugh Scott following a one-hour, 45-minute meeting between the president and congressional leaders.

It directly contradicted a highly controversial announcement by deputy press secretary Jack W. Hushen Tuesday that Ford had the idea of a mass pardon "under study."

There is "no study going on," Scott said, apparently paraphrasing the president's own words.

Ford's brief statement said Hushen's announcement was prompted by questions about a plea for clemency from the wife of John W. Dean III, the former White House counsel who was jailed last week for his part in the Watergate cover-up.

The president did not dispute Hushen's claim that he had been authorized to announce the possibility of a blanket pardon. But the statement said that any study of clemency will be made only on individual requests from Watergate defendants.

The issue of pardons for Watergate has sent more waves of criticism crashing over the White House Tuesday.

Senator Sam Ervin (Dem. N.C.) chairman of the Senate Watergate committee, said: "I can't imagine that he (Ford) could possibly make such a mockery of the principle of equal justice under law by pardoning these men who undertook to steal from the American people their right to a free election and to undermine the process by which presidents are chosen."

Congressional reaction included these comments:

"My definition of equal justice is not restricted to those involved in Watergate and Vietnam draft dodgers," Sen. Lowell P. Weicker, R-Conn. "There's no end."

Sen. Daniel K. Inouye, D-Hawaii, asked: "Are they

Massive Raids Break Pep-Pill Smugglers

WASHINGTON (UPI) United States and Mexican police today arrested more than 120 suspects, including several "drug millionaires," in a series of raids that one official said broke the back of illegal pep pill trafficking in the U.S.

RCMP in Vancouver also helped in the investigation.

The arrests followed an eight-month investigation in the three countries and Europe into the smuggling of more than three billion "minibennies" — small benzedrine tablets — worth about $1.6 billion into the United States annually from Mexico.

"There is no question about it. We have broken the back of the illegal amphetamine operation in this country," said Doug Chandler of the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration.

"We got a couple of people in Mexico who are described as drug millionaires — they are drug rich," said Chandler. "They have also got rich from traffic in other drugs."

Most of the 124 persons in custody at mid-morning were in the United States. In Mexico, 26 were arrested, including one Mexican national.

The DEA spokesman said he expected the arrests would total about 140.

"The operation has gone smoothly and there have been no injuries reported so far in the arrests," said Chandler, who co-ordinated the raids.

Stuart Stromfield of the DEA said raiding parties were armed with sealed indictments, opened just before they struck.

"The raw materials used to manufacture these pills are being imported illegally from Europe," from some of the "biggest chemical companies," according to Stromfeld. He declined to name the countries or the firms.

FEIFFER IN TIMES

Satire and black humor are the trademarks of famed cartoonist Jules Feiffer, whose distinctive drawings begin in the Times today on page five, where they will become a regular feature.

Feiffer's syndicated cartoons now appear in newspapers all around the globe and have made him a hero of the egghead and the secret dissenter.

He has also written plays which have been produced on Broadway and wrote the screenplay for the film Carnal Knowledge. The relationship between men and women is one of his favorite themes, as well as politics and social mores.

NEWS BRIEFS

Canadian's Death Sparks UN Protest

NICOSIA (UPI) — The United Nations peacekeeping force in Cyprus today lodged a protest with the government here over the killing of a Canadian soldier.

Pvt. Joseph Jean Claude Berger, 21, of Rimouski, Que., was killed by a shot in the back of the head Tuesday night while riding in a UN vehicle in the outskirts of Nicosia.

Guns Found in Cells

MONTREAL (CP) — Quebec Provincial Police said Tuesday a weekend search at Archambault Institution, in nearby Ste. Anne des Plaines, uncovered a large amount of weapons and money in prisoners' cells.

The QPP is questioning several prisoners in an effort to learn how revolvers, dynamite, gunpowder, bullets, an electric motor, an electric saw, an electric drill, money, and drugs got into the cells.

Frost Cuts Wheat

LONDON (AFP) — The world wheat harvest for 1974-75 now is expected to be less than first estimated because of frost damage in some important producing areas, the International Wheat Council says.

Oilmen Released

ADDIS ABABA (UPI) — Ethiopian guerrillas have freed three American oil company executives and a United Nations official they kidnapped six months ago and led on forced marches through rocky desert land to evade pursuers.

Ill Prisoners Freed

NICOSIA (AP) — Greek and Turkish-Cypriot leaders agreed today to free sick and wounded war prisoners as a prelude to a general release of all captives in Cyprus crisis, the United Nations said.

Greek-Cypriot President Glafkos Clerides and Turkish-Cypriot Vice-President Raouf Denktash also agreed to free all prisoners under 18 years of age and teachers and university students, says a communique from the UN peace force.

Fired O'Grady Suing ICBC

Secretary and general counsel for the Insurance Corporation of B.C. Terry O'Grady, has been fired from his post and has launched a suit against the crown corporation for wrongful dismissal and breach of contract.

O'Grady a former Victoria city solicitor, has been considered second in authority since he joined the corporation July 21, 1973.

His duties have been assumed by corporation general manager Norman Bortnick who declined to give any reason for O'Grady's dismissal.

O'Grady and his lawyer, George Murray filed the writ against ICBC Tuesday and claimed unspecified damages on the two counts.

O'Grady's ICBC salary was never disclosed but indications are he moved to Vancouver for a substantial pay increase.

His contract with Victoria was in the neighborhood of $48,000 a year.

He was 23 years in city service, being the city solicitor for the last 17 years.

O'Grady says he will not be returning to Victoria but will probably go into general practice in the Vancouver area.

When he took the ICBC appointment, O'Grady said it would give him an opportunity to help build "one of Canada's great ventures from the ground up."

$18M Loss for ICBC?

A 10 per cent loss of $18.5 million could be shown this year by Autoplan, Premier Barrett said Tuesday.

The statement made during a phone-in radio program refutes an earlier report alleged to be taken from a secret brief indicating a first-year loss of $100 million or more for the government-operated car insurance plan.

Barrett said Autoplan revenue is expected to be $185 million and he said the operating loss could amount to 10 per cent, about equal to the rate of inflation.

The premier's admission also contradicts a statement by Transport Minister Robert Strachan, who is responsible for Autoplan, in which he said the system would break even or suffer marginal loss in its first year.

Barrett said he has a statement giving figures for the first six months of operations of the Insurance Corp. of B.C. But there will be no public report until the end of the first 12 months.

100 Die in Race Violence As White Rebels Collapse

Times News Services

LISBON — More than 100 persons have been killed in street battles in the last 24 hours in Lourenco Marques following the collapse of a white settlers' rebellion, the official radio station in the Portuguese territory reported today.

The Star newspaper in Johannesburg, South Africa, quoted a senior Portuguese official as saying at least 200 persons had been killed or wounded in the widespread racial violence.

South African radio quoted refugees as saying the colony was near anarchy. A Lisbon government communique said troops were having difficulty in stopping spreading violence.

Witnesses at the South African-Mozambique border said many of the hundreds of Portuguese settlers who crossed the frontier abandoned their cars and walked to escape from roaming black gangs and roadblocks.

Just before most communications to Lourenco Marques were cut Tuesday night, a police officer told newsmen the riots in the black shantytowns were roaring out of control.

"This is another Vietnam," he said. "We don't know how to stop them."

A wealthy Italian farmer, Nick Benini, contacted Johannesburg by phone for a few minutes and said many people living outside Lourenco Marques had abandoned their homes.

In the city, he said, whites barricaded their homes. Food was running short because shops were closed and trucks with supplies were not arriving from the countryside.

A Portuguese government communique issued in Lisbon reported "racial violence" and said the army is flying reinforcements to the capital from northern Mozabique.

Blacks rampaged through sections of the city looting and burning shops, stoning cars and fighting gun battles with whites.

Beira, Mozambique's second-largest city and chief port, was reported quiet after two days of noisy demonstrations.

The Lisbon newspaper O Seculo reported that the leaders of the three-day revolt have also fled to neighboring South Africa or Rhodesia.

Army detachments were posted at key points throughout Lourenco Marques and were patrolling the black shantytowns on three sides of the city amid "intense agitation," Lisbon officials said.

Reporters said whites could travel in some sections only by armed convoy. Black smoke hung over some areas, and most businesses were closed.

Two Crashes Kill 3 Bikers

Three young motorcyclists died in two accidents Tuesday, one in Colwood, the other in Saanich.

James Edward Sigurdson, 21, of 1514 Brooke, and his brother, William Carl, 19, of the same address, died when the motorcycle they were riding on the Pat Bay highway went over an embankment in the Royal Oak area.

Saanich police said the brothers were killed instantly.

And Richard Davis, 22, of 2321 Cook, died after being taken to hospital following a head-on collision with a car on West Burnside near Quincy. Frances Welland, 33, of 1254 West Burnside was the car driver, RCMP said.

AIR CRASH KILLS 69

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (UPI) — An Eastern Air Lines DC-9 jet skimming through fog patches and heading for a landing at Charlotte's Douglas municipal airport crashed and burned today, killing 69 of the 82 persons aboard. (See picture on Page 3.)

Most of the 13 survivors were burned.

The crash occurred at 7:33 a.m. in an open field 2½ miles south of the airport.

A Federal Aviation Administration spokesman, Jack Barker, said that moments before the crash the flight had just been "handed off," or turned over to the local tower controller by radar control.

"Nothing in any conversations with the local controller or the radar controller indicated any trouble," Barker said.

Witnesses said most of those who survived were thrown free from the plane into a clump of trees.

The plane cut a 200-yard-wide swath as it came down, exploding in flames and sending debris and bodies flying in all directions.

Calvin Kenley, 20, who lives just 600 yards from the crash site, said he saw one of the survivors "just walking around in the field in a daze. He looked like he had run through a fire. Skin was just hanging all over him. It made me sick."

There is "no study going on," Scott said, apparently paraphrasing the president's own words.

Ford's brief statement said Hushen's announcement was prompted by questions about a plea for clemency from the wife of John W. Dean III, the former White House counsel who was jailed last week for his part in the Watergate cover-up.

The president did not dispute Hushen's claim that he had been authorized to announce the possibility of a blanket pardon. But the statement said that any study of clemency will be made only on individual requests from Watergate defendants.

The issue of pardons for Watergate has sent more waves of criticism crashing over the White House Tuesday.

Senator Sam Ervin (Dem., N.C.) chairman of the Senate Watergate committee, said: "I can't imagine that he (Ford) could possibly make such a mockery of the principle of equal justice under law by pardoning these men who undertook to steal from the American people their right to a free election and to undermine the process by which presidents are chosen."

Congressional reaction included these comments:

"My definition of equal justice is not restricted to those involved in Watergate and Vietnam draft dodgers," Sen. Lowell P. Weicker, R-Conn. "There's no end."

Sen. Daniel K. Inouye, D-Hawaii, asked: "Are they

Massive Raids Break Pep-Pill Smugglers

WASHINGTON (UPI) — United States and Mexican police today arrested more than 120 suspects, including several "drug millionaires," in a series of raids that one official said broke the back of illegal pep pill trafficking in the U.S.

RCMP in Vancouver also helped in the investigation.

The arrests followed an eight-month investigation in the three countries and Europe into the smuggling of more than three billion "minibennies" — small benzedrine tablets — worth about $1.6 billion into the United States annually from Mexico.

"There is no question about it. We have broken the back of the illegal amphetamine operation in this country," said Doug Chandler of the U.S. Drug Enforcement Administration.

"We got a couple of people in Mexico who are described as drug millionaires — they are drug rich," said Chandler. "They have also got rich from traffic in other drugs."

Most of the 124 persons in custody at mid-morning were in the United States. In Mexico, 26 were arrested, including one Mexican national.

The DEA spokesman said he expected the arrests would total about 140.

"The operation has gone smoothly and there have been no injuries reported so far in the arrests," said Chandler, who co-ordinated the raids.

Stuart Stromfield of the DEA said raiding parties were armed with sealed indictments, opened just before they struck.

"The raw materials used to manufacture these pills are being imported illegally from Europe," from some of the "biggest chemical companies," according to Stromfield. He declined to name the countries or the firms.

100 Die in Race Violence As White Rebels Collapse

Times News Services

LISBON — More than 100 persons have been killed in street battles in the last 24 hours in Lourenco Marques following the collapse of a white settlers' rebellion, the official radio station in the Portuguese territory reported today.

The Star newspaper in Johannesburg, South Africa, quoted a senior Portuguese official as saying at least 200 persons had been killed or wounded in the widespread racial violence.

South African radio quoted refugees as saying the colony was near anarchy. A Lisbon government communique said troops were having difficulty in stopping spreading violence.

Witnesses at the South African-Mozambique border said many of the hundreds of Portuguese settlers who crossed the frontier abandoned their cars and walked to escape from roaming black gangs and roadblocks.

Just before most communications to Lourenco Marques were cut Tuesday night, a police officer told newsmen the riots in the black shantytowns were roaring out of control.

"This is another Vietnam," he said. "We don't know how to stop them."

A wealthy Italian farmer, Nick Benini, contacted Johannesburg by phone for a few minutes and said many people living outside Lourenco Marques had abandoned their homes.

In the city, he said, whites barricaded their homes. Food was running short because shops were closed and trucks with supplies were not arriving from the countryside.

A Portuguese government communique issued in Lisbon reported "racial violence" and said the army is flying reinforcements to the capital from northern Mozabique.

Blacks rampaged through sections of the city looting and burning shops, stoning cars and fighting gun battles with whites.

Beira, Mozambique's second-largest city and chief port, was reported quiet after two days of noisy demonstrations.

The Lisbon newspaper O Seculo reported that the leaders of the three-day revolt have also fled to neighboring South Africa or Rhodesia.

Army detachments were posted at key points throughout Lourenco Marques and were patrolling the black shantytowns on three sides of the city amid "intense agitation," Lisbon officials said.

Reporters said whites could travel in some sections only by armed convoy. Black smoke hung over some areas, and most businesses were closed.

Two Crashes Kill 3 Bikers

Three young motorcyclists died in two accidents Tuesday, one in Colwood, the other in Saanich.

James Edward Sigurdson, 21, of 1514 Brooke, and his brother, William Carl, 19, of the same address, died when the motorcycle they were riding on the Pat Bay highway went over an embankment in the Royal Oak area.

Saanich police said the brothers were killed instantly.

And Richard Davis, 22, of 2321 Cook, died after being taken to hospital following a head-on collision with a car on West Burnside near Quincy. Frances Welland, 33, of 1254 West Burnside was the car driver, RCMP said.

Fired O'Grady Suing ICBC

Secretary and general counsel for the Insurance Corporation of B.C. Terry O'Grady, has been fired from his post and has launched a suit against the crown corporation for wrongful dismissal and breach of contract.

O'Grady, a former Victoria city solicitor, has been considered second in authority since he joined the corporation July 21, 1973.

His duties have been assumed by corporation general manager Norman Bortnick who declined to give any reason for O'Grady's dismissal.

O'Grady and his lawyer, George Murray filed the writ against ICBC Tuesday and claimed unspecified damages on the two counts.

O'Grady's ICBC salary was never disclosed but indications are he moved to Vancouver for a substantial pay increase.

His contract with Victoria was in the neighborhood of $48,000 a year.

He was 23 years in city service, being the city solicitor for the last 17 years.

O'Grady says he will not be returning to Victoria but will probably go into general practice in the Vancouver area.

When he took the ICBC appointment, O'Grady said it would give him an opportunity to help build "one of Canada's great ventures from the ground up."

$18M Loss for ICBC?

A 10 per cent loss of $18.5 million could be shown this year by Autoplan, Premier Barrett said Tuesday.

The statement made during a phone-in radio program refutes an earlier report alleged to be taken from a secret brief indicating a first-year loss of $100 million or more for the government-operated car insurance plan.

Barrett said Autoplan revenue is expected to be $185 million and he said the operating loss could amount to 10 per cent, about equal to the rate of inflation.

The premier's admission also contradicts a statement by Transport Minister Robert Strachan, who is responsible for Autoplan, in which he said the system would break even or suffer marginal loss in its first year.

Barrett said he has a statement giving figures for the first six months of operations of the Insurance Corp. of B.C. But there will be no public report until the end of the first 12 months.

AIR CRASH KILLS 69

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (UPI) — An Eastern Air Lines DC-9 jet skimming through fog patches and heading for a landing at Charlotte's Douglas municipal airport crashed and burned today, killing 69 of the 82 persons aboard. (See picture on Page 3.)

Most of the 13 survivors were burned.

The crash occurred at 7:33 a.m. in an open field 2½ miles south of the airport.

A Federal Aviation Administration spokesman, Jack Barker, said that moments before the crash the flight had just been "handed off," or turned over to the local tower controller by radar control.

"Nothing in any conversations with the local controller or the radar controller indicated any trouble," Barker said.

Witnesses said most of those who survived were thrown free from the plane into a clump of trees.

The plane cut a 200-yard-wide swath as it came down, exploding in flames and sending debris and bodies flying in all directions.

Calvin Kenley, 20, who lives just 600 yards from the crash site, said he saw one of the survivors "just walking around in the field in a daze. He looked like he had run through a fire. Skin was just hanging all over him. It made me sick."
